

TRAINING A HUSBAND.

So you want to know how I came to have Caleb when I know just how he used Nancy, his first wife. Well, I'll tell you about it. You know Daniel left me pretty poorly off. I had two little children, and what to do I didn't know. The mortgage was to run out in about a year and a half after he died. I had sent the children down to brother John's to go to school. Brother John wanted me to give them to him and he'd do it well by them, and I was meditating on it, awful loth to do it. But what else could I do with them when the old farm was took away? One day, when the time was near out I was hoeing the beans side of the fence next Caleb's cornfield. I tell you I never felt bluer in my life. I'd always ived and worked on a farm, and couldn't do no other kind of work; so what was to become of me I didn't know. "Pretty good hoeing for a green hand," says somebody over the fence. "Yes, I've done enough of it since I was left alone. Practice makes perfect," I used to write in my copy-books when we were children," I answered, and I couldn't help heaving a sigh. "Well, Emmerline," says he, "you and I seem to be in the same fix. You need a man to do your hoeing and such, and I need a woman to see to my house and if you're agreed we'll hitch horses and work in double harness. I can't find no help that'll do as Nancy did. So what do you say, Emmerline?" Perhaps I didn't think of nothing for the next few minutes. It all flashed over me in a few minutes. It all flashed over me in a second, what an unfeeling man he'd always been. Poor Nancy had to do all the housework and a good deal belonging to him to do, and he was stinger than an old miser, too. I knew he was a smart man to work for and he was able to live in a good deal better shape than he did, and you know poor Daniel was just the opposite. He was an awful clever man was Daniel but kind of shiftless and easy, and it always worried me to have things going so slack. Says I to myself a body can't have everything; there's always some outs, and a poor man's always some none. So I says—"Caleb, we've been neighbors for many a year. I know your failings and I suppose you know mine; and so, if you say so all right; perhaps we might do worse." Well, to make a long story short, we agreed to have the business done right off. Caleb said it was stylish to go on a wedding tour, and as he wanted to go down to Bangor to see about selling his wool, and as Sarah Jane Curtis—who used to work for him—lived about half way there, and we could stop there both ways and not cost us anything, he thought we'd better go. Brother John lives there, too, and I made up my mind I'd just bring home the children. "And so I did, but Caleb was awful not agin it, but said 'of course they could come and make a visit,' and let him think so, because I wasn't quite ready to have words with him. We staid about a week, and got home along in the afternoon. The next morning I woke up pretty early, and I says to myself—" "Courage, Emmerline, now or never." I kept still, for Caleb was still snoring, but soon he fetched an uncharny snort that waked himself up, and when he see it was getting daylight, he says—" "Wake up, Emmerline; its broad daylight; come, come, get up! we shan't have any breakfast to-day." "I was awful hard to wake, but after a while I managed to, and while I was rubbing my eyes, I says—" "Got a good fire, ain't you, Caleb?" "Fire? No, I never build any fires. Nancy always built the fires," he says. "Did she? So did Daniel," says I, cool as a cucumber. I turned over and went to sleep again—or at least he thought I did. Well, he turned and twisted, and he didn't get up for about an hour, then he got up and built the fire. There wasn't any wood or kindlings, and he had to skirmin' round lively and get some. After the fire got to crackling I got up. He was pretty stilled all day, but I didn't notice it, and he got over it. The next day he was to begin haying. I had to do all the work, and take care of the milk and churning, and it was no fool of a job. Come time to get dinner, there was no wood cut. I sent Johnnie out in the field to tell Caleb that I wanted him. He came in, looking savage enough and asked what I wanted. "I want some wood to burn," says I, as innocent as could be. "Well, there's a whole woodpile out there. Help yourself." "And not a stick split. You will have to get a bigger stove to burn that." "Well, it ain't such a hard job to split. Nancy used to, often when I was busy." "Did she? So did Daniel," says I. He got the wood, and said he didn't want to be called again unless it was for vitnals. "All right," says I. The next day there wasn't a stick split. I thought I'd learn him something. So when it was dinner time I blew the horn and in come seven men. Such astonished faces as they saw the grub! There was the biscuit just dough, the meat and vegetables washed clean and put on raw. Caleb looked blacker than a thunder cloud. "What does this mean?" says he. "You said yesterday that you didn't want to be called in again unless it was for vitnals, and here they are." "Nice shape too," said he. "Well, I can't cook without wood," says I. With that all seven started for the door, and they never left that pile until it was all ready for the stove. A few weeks after I wanted money pretty bad. I wanted to send Johnnie and Nellie back to school, and I was bound they should have clothes fit to wear. I asked Caleb a number of times to let me have some, but he made all kinds of excuses. So one day plang

ca on a peddler that wanted to buy butter and eggs. I had considerable on hand that Caleb was intending to carry to the city when he had time, so I sold all the butter and eggs I had in the house. I got nigh on to twenty-five dollars for them. When Caleb came home I told him I had sold the butter and eggs. "How much did you get?" says he. "I told him." "Where's the money?" says he. "I've got it," says I. "Well, Nancy always give me all the money that she took for her butter and eggs," says he. "Did she? And so did Daniel," says I. He got tired of holding Nancy up afore my eyes for I would offset her with Daniel every time. He found that I was powerful set in my ways, and he thought he might as well let me have my own way, so says he—" "I don't mean to be ugly, but I won't be trod on by nobody." When he wouldn't let me have what money I wanted, I'd sell something. I sold two tons of hay one time, when I knew he had only enough to winter his critters. On the whole he found out that I wasn't afraid of him; I told him not long ago that he was growing clever. "Clever! I'd rather you'd call me a dog-gone fool than clever," says he. But I notice he has improved and I lay it to his training. BVD BLOOD SYMPTOMS: Blisters, Pimples, Eruptions, Boils, Rash, Eruptions, Tumors, Abscesses, Bad Complexion, Low Vitality, Poor Circulation, etc. As Impure Blood and Poor Circulation is sufficient to cause nearly every disease, the Symptoms must vary according to the Organs most affected. CAUSE: Scrofulous Constitution or Hereditary Taint in the system, Bad Air, Improper Diet and Manner of Living, Bad drainage, Inactive Bowels, and Kidneys, Weak Lungs, Tapped Liver, and many other obvious causes, including want of Cleanliness. As Impure Organic action makes Bad Blood, so Bad Blood in turn makes imperfect action of every bodily Organ. CURE: Observe strictly all the Laws of Health; Keep the Skin Clean; the Bowels and Kidneys in perfect working order to carry off poisonous matter; Avoid High Living; Have access to pure Air and Healthful Exercise; Eat Plain Nourishing Food, and take BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS The Great Key to Health, which unlocks all the Secretions by acting upon the Royal Cardinal Points of Health—the Stomach, Liver, Bowels and Blood.
