That Committee.

To the Editor of the Advance : SIR, - When a handful of private citizens who are by no means remarkable, above the rank and file of their neighbors, for ability, public spirit or any of those qualities which exalt one man above his fellows, which exalt one man above his fellows, come prominently forward and assume to themselves the sole right of selecting themselves the sole right of selecting Hope" by Mrs. Goggin and Miss in the postal service of New Brunswick. Representatives for a county, they justly earn not only the criticism but the deserved censure of the electors against whom they had conspired to deprive them of the right of franchise. This is precisely the case with the self-appointed committee who seem to have failed to detect and neglected to rectify the fulsome flattery and glaring errors of the requisition they were induced to father and then circulate among the electors of Northum. be land for signatures. The vanity of this self-constituted committee must be stretched to its utmost tension when they have the presumption to act upon the belief that in their ranks are to be found the concentrated political wisdom of this county. The following gentlemen compose the Committee : - Allan Ritchie, Charman, John O'Brien, J. S. Benson, M. D., John McDonald, M. D., John C. Miller, Rueben S. Cormier, Daniel Crimmen and C. E. Fish, Secretary.

Whatever may be the qualifications and intellectual gifts that these gentle.nen possess, they have yet to pass the pons asinorum problem of political knowledge before they enter upon the task of instructing others. How is it that it is only at the twelfth hour he has aroused himself from his long political sleep. What was he about during the long years the late Government were squandering the public funds of the Province and heaping up the debt which now lies heavy upon the shoulders of the people? Perhaps at that time it was to his interest to keep quiet as his two friends Kelly and Adams, in turn, occupied important positions in it. Now, however, that the shoes they placed upon his feet are beginning to cramp and pinch his toes, he is restive and ill at ease. It is my opinion is that it is to his interest to support the present Government and quietly "rather bear the ills he has than fly to others that he knows not of." which would be sure to come if his old friends, the party of corruption, were

Mr. Vondy went home to tea on Friday evening as usual, and while his family observed nothing in his condition to cause alarm, it is evident that in his hurry to get back to the office to attend committee from Derby, I am of the to the large and delayed mail which he expected, he over-exerted himself, especially as the sidewalks were made slippery by the prevailing thaw. At all events, when he reached the office he was in a somewhat exhausted condition. He removed his overcoat and cap and passed out the rear door from the office, but, returning after a few minutes, he leaned, as if in weakness and distress, on the counter just inside the registry entrance. Master Stapledon, one of his assistants, seeing Dr. Baxter at the window asked Mr. Vondy whether he should call him in. Mr. Vondy said he didn't want a doctor, although it is probable he did not understand that Dr. Baxter was so near at hand. At his request young Stapledon had placed a chair for him to sit in, and atter occupying it a very short time, he rose and made his way towards his desk in the opposite corner of the office. Here he leaned against the sorting-shelf and the lad, at his request, again brought over and placed the chair for him, but he did not sit in it. He next placed the chair-cushion and an empty mail bag on the floor and lay down upon them. The lad who was with him had seen him in a somewhat similar condition before, and, being for nearly an hour, he did not seem to realise the severity of the attack. At all events, at about half past seven, after Mr. Vondy had lain for, perhaps, a quarter of an hour on the floor, Mr. the delivery window, observed him as
