He never reached that place ment tent from which hot coffee and eatnor has he ever been seen since. The

A Fish-Flood.

The last N Y. Fishing Gazette says,-"The reports of the market for the last week indicates the folly of making large shipments during the holidays. As a usual thing our people ignore fish and buy poultry, especially when it is cheap. This year the market has been glutted with poultry and the extremely mild weather has made it necessary for the dealers to dispose of it at any price they could get, consequently fish have been badly left, and dealers have been obliged to pile up their stock outside of the market-the freezers all being full-and do the best they could with it. It has been almost impossible to give anything like a correct list of prices on account of fluctuations. Several lots that were just a little off were sold at just what buyers would offer and shippers must not be disappointed if they receive ruinous re-turus." The University Troubles.
