PARKS MANAGED DAUGHTER.

One evening Mr. Joel Parks, a wealthy manufacturer in the thriving New England village of Redfield, and Dr. Mill, leading physician of the same | then she is sure that she doesn't. Then place, sat chatting in the Doctor's of- appears another young man, evidently fice. A stranger noting the age and an adventurer, and probably a Jew. rather prosaic appearance of the two men, would hardly have guessed the topic of conversation. They were discussing works of fiction.

'I must have been going on 50 years old when I read my first novel,' Mr. Parks was saying. 'You see a man barefooted, so to speak, has got to stand to business for a good many years, if | girl in a story always has her own way, he expects to get anywhere in particular at last. He does not get much time for light reading, Doctor. But in | go to work exactly wrong. They don't the last few years I've read a good make any allowance for the perversity many, and I enjoy them, especially of human nature. They fill the girl's when they seem true to life, and I ears with praises of the right one, till think I can generally tell when they she's tired and sick of him, and keep are. I like Trollope on that account. her thinking about the wrong one, by I never saw an archbishop or duke, but forbidding her to think of him at all. I know as well as I want to that he just hits them off to a T. And I like end for end.'

The way to do it is to turn the thing and 50 feet on Duke St., and will be sold with buildings &c. as they now stand. This is one of the that Howells, if he does hold men such tell you, Doctor, there is instruction ed a plan for managing his daughter. in novels. Those writers have to study human nature. I've got many a hint about managing men from reading those books.' 'Yes,' said the doctor, 'I've read them all my life, and I like them yet -love passages and all. Funny, isn't it!' he continued, 'how two old grey heads like you and me will follow the love story of a boy and a girl who won't listen to their natural guardians, and sympathise with them every time. We never have any feeling for the sensible fathers and mothers of our own age who are plotted against.'

'I don't know about that,' was the with the old folks, and think that if I which he will supply at reasonable rates.

'Well, Joel,' said the other with a laugh, 'L guess that is one point on which you never get much instruction rom story-tellers. Papa and mamma always have their ideas of their daughter's future. The wrong young man happens along, and she develops her ideas quite opposite from theirs. And she always comes out ahead. If you want to carry your point with your offspring, you will have to learn how outside of a story-book.' 'Oh, as to that, perhaps the instruction is all there, only it's instruction how not to do it. I don't suppose that daughter about a husband or a lover but if I should I am sure that I could learn some thing from the novelists.'

If there were no coincidences, there would be no stories. It was a coincidence that, later on that same evening, Mrs. Joel Parks, an amiable lady whose mind was in her husband's keeping, said to him;

'Joel, have you ever noticed that Lee Tilton and Annie seem to be taking a notion for each other?'

Joel was engaged with his newspaper at the time, and he did not take his eyes from the list of newly appointed postmasters which he had been reading. But it cost him an effort, for his wife's question was a shock indeed. Such an idea had never occurred to him, and as he sat! there, physically at ease, he found his thoughts sadly crowding each

Lee Tilton! One of his own clerks! in fact almost anything that cannot be get elsewhere —GIVE ME A CALL. A likely fellow enough, pleasant and honest. But he didn't like Lee Tilton. He didn't know just why, and he had never thought of it before, but no he was sure of so much. Lee was nothing but a Redfield boy, anyway; and unambitious-staying in a little place like that, and living with his mother and sister. And then his daughter Annie What a future was possible for that girl! Beautiful as any heroine of fiction. No! his daughter should never be given to Lee Tilton?

That was one decision, absolute and final. A subordinate question was also discussed and settled in the mental council of war. It would perhaps be as well that Mrs. Parks should not, for the present, know her husband's feelings in the matter. So much having been arranged, he slowly raised his eyes from the paper, looked at his wife absently, and said: 'Oom-eh?'

'I was asking if you had noticed anything in particular between Lee Tilton and Annie,' replied Mrs. Parks placid-'No, I think not. But what have you noticed?' 'Why, I don't know. Not much of anything perhaps. But he comes up here evenings, and they read together some. And-well, one thing and another has led me to think that they might be getting interested in each other.' Joel did not continue the conversation but soon betook himself to the room, half office and half library, where he was wont to retire when he had leisure for reading, or when he had some perplexing business problem to think out. Here he sat a while in meditation. He had accepted in full his wife's revelation, without thought of investigating the grounds on which it was based.

His camp had been surprised! How should he meet the foe? Presently he stepped to the shelves which lined the room, and hastily turned over the pages of several novels, just as the lawyer might in an emergency consult books with which he was already very fami-

Yes, here were plenty of cases. Here was the girl of high social position, the daughter of a duke, who becomes enamored of the poor young commoner. ·The father interferes. The girl will not disobey her father, but neither will she give up her lover. Taken abroad and no correspondence allowed. No use. Takes no interest in anything. Rarely seen to smile. And her father has to give it up at last. 'Of course he does,' soliloquized Joel; so should I. You don't want to break your daughter's heart, and when a girl with a mind of her own, like Annie, gets it fairly set upon anything, you can't change it for her by force.' Here was another case : Young lady loved by a man of her own rank, and everything that he ought to be. Her 4th Mey, 11885.
