IN WIG AND GOWN.

Lady Hayward had been to London to see her lawyers about some urgent business and, leaving Lord Hayward to entertain the guests during her short absence, had gone alone, or rather with her maid. She had staid the night in town in order to bring with her a new dress for a ball which was to be given at the castle the following evening.

At last the carriage dashed up to the door, driven very fast, for the coachman knew it was late. The first person who emerged from it was an exceedingly quiet-looking, well-dressd young woman -the maid evidently. She quickly disappeared and was followed by Lady Hayward, who instantly seized her husband's arm.

'I want to speak to you,' said Lord Hayward, 'hefore you dress; there's just time.'

He followed her up to her dressingroom, where tea was waiting on a little table near the tire. Lady Hayward's maid had just put an easy wrapper temptingly ready, and was busy getting out a dinner dress for her mistress.

'I will send for you in a few minutes Taylor,' said Lady Hayward; and the perfectly-trained servant vanished

'I wonder whether it's that girl, after all!' exclaimed Lord Hayward; The moment the door closed on the last

'yet it seems impossible.' 'Don't talk erigmas,' said Lady Hayward imperiously; 'there isn't time. What is the matter? She was pouring out her tea as she spoke, and now began to sip it.

'More things have disappeared,' said Lord Hayward, in a low voice, and this time it's worse. The old duchess has lost a big diamond ring, and your sister's diamond necklace is gone.' Lady Hayward put down her tea.

'Vernon, this is awful, she said. 'What are we to do? Who can it be It's absurd to talk abo. Taylor; she was with me in town.'

'Ah, but we can't tell exactly what time the things were taken; she may have gotten rid of them in London. It was when you took her to town with you last that your diamond brooch went.'

'So it was,' said Lady Hayward. 'But that makes no difference. The brooch was taken while we were away, Besides, the thing is absurd. Taylor is above suspicion, I know the girl so well. Why, Vernon, she went with me all through France and Italy when I joined you in Rome; we were always together, and I used to talk to her a great deal. She is a very superior girl. No; it would be most unjust to suspect Taylor.'

'Well, there is no one else,' said Lord Hayward dejectedly, 'except poor little Rose Mai. Jering.'

'Poor little Rose Mannering,' was the governess who took charge of their own little girl. 'Absurd!' said Lady Hayward. And so it was on the face of it. They knew

Rose Mannering's family well; she was a lady, and little more than a child. A silence followed, during which both looked into the fire for inspiration. All the servants in the house were born of families who had been for generations on the estate. The idea of suspecting any of them was too painful. Taylor was the only exception, and she had been with Lady Hayward two

'I begin to believe,' said Lady Hay ward, 'that it is one of our guests.' 'Good heavens, Kate, what an idea.

'Can you suggest anything else?' 'No, I can't. There's some infernal deviltry at work, but beat my brains how I will, I can't see where it comes

'I tell you what we must do, Vernon, said Lady Hayward decisively. 'We must be very careful, not frighten anyone, and keep our own counsel. Ride over to the town early to-morrow morning and telegraph to Scotland Yard for a detective to come down disguised to the hall. There will be so many people the servants won't have time to notice him. He must stop on as a visitor until he finds out something.' 'That will do.' exclaimed Lord Hay-

'Now go,' said Lady Hayward, ringing the bell for Taylor; 'I must dress at

As he went out he met the maid in the doorway, and gave her a more curious look than usual. The result was only to give up his idea as preposterous. She had a very gentle, good face; her soft brown hair, brushed smothly over her ears, gave it an almost Puritanic look. Lady Hayward had made something of a friend of her, and the girl had never presumed in the least upon it, but had always retained her subdued, sweet manner.

Lady Hayward scrutinized her, too, during the process of dressing, but she shrank from the thoughts in her own mind. She had grown fond of her treasure of a maid, and felt ashamed of her quickly suppressed suspicions.

Early next mornnig the telegram was sent to Scotland Yard by Lord Hayward who rode over alone to send it and waited for the answer. The reply seemed to please him and he rode back in good spirits to a late breakfast He even faced, with moderate cheerfulness, Lady Hayward's eldest sister, who was in a frightful state about her necklace. This lady was one of his pet aversions: she was not pretty or cle er like his wife, but she was more irreproachable, more moral, more perfect, and she was an old maid. Probably she was the only person in the world of whom Lady Hayward was afraid. Miss Collette was a severe censor in all things and kept her eyeglass well fixed THE Subscriber has on hand thirteen (13) new on her younger sister who had an important position to fill before the world. At present Miss Collette was very angry because she did not know what was being done about the thefts; she had found out before that the exemplary Cecelia could not hold her tongue.

This extreme discretion having been observed, the Scotland Yard detective arrived as a visitor, and no one paid any particular attention to him. He was very quiet and adopted the character of the man who does not dance. ed admirably. A number of other men with superb shirt-fronts hung about the doorways and looked bored. Mr. Hawk was admirably gotten up for the purpose, and had only to mingle with these others and looked as bored as they.

Lady Hayward was delighted at this excellent effacement of himself and kept her eye on him with great interest. She managed to speak to him very late when the party was breaking up. He had discovered nothing so far-not even a "clew"- and she went to bed disapfasted, of course, at any time during the morning; but the family and household always assembled to morning pray ers at a quarter to 9, and breakfast formally began directly afterwards. Mr. Hawk had learned this and was in the breakfast-room early—the only guest present. No one else turned up but Lord and Lady Hayward themselves, Rose Mannering, who always appeared with her charge at this time, and the servants. Even Miss Collette was too tired to come down, though no one was stricter, theoretically, on the subject of family prayers. How grateful was Lady Hayward, half an hour afterward, that her sister had been late that morning! The servants all came in, led by the butler and the stately housekeeper, and Lady Hayward read prayers. Mr Hawk sat very quietly in the shadow of a cur-

'My Lord,' he said, 'may the men servants watch the windows of this room outside for a few minutes? Don't ask me to explain, there's no time to lose. The old butler came in at that moment, carrying a silver coffee pot. Lord Hayward gave the order.

'And tell them to keep their eyes a good barn on the premises, a kitchen garden open,' added Mr. Hawk. 'We've got to deal with the lightest pair of heels in the kingdom.'

Lady Hayward listened and looked her heart in her mouth. What was coming next?

'Your ladyship,' said Mr. Hawk, Alexander Templeton. 'may I send for your maid?' Lord Hav- | FOR TERMS AND FURTHER PAR ward rang instantly.

At the first glance Lidy Hayward had seen a curious look on the girl's face-one she had never seen there before. But immediately she was herself again, and now she stood before Lord and Lady Hayward and the detective, perfectly quiet, without a quiver on her face. 'John,' said Mr. Hawk, 'this is really very wrong of you: it is an infamous trick to have played. For two years you have been wanted, and I knew you weren't out of the country; but I'd no idea you could be doing such a thing as lng.

While he spoke Mr. Hawk had approached Taylor and put a pair of handcuffs on her. There had been a little by-play first; Taylor had scanned the windows and instantly saw they were

'So the game's up,' she said suddenly. 'Yes, my lady's maid, to the tune of fourteen years,' answered Mr. Hawk. 'What does it mean?' cried Lady Hay
