She brushed by without speaking, and he, when he reached the door, almost stumbled over a basket where you lay all snuggled up in warm flannels. Ah, but you were a very nice baby, my

"Pity my mother hadn't thought so!" I sarcastically observed. "Undoubtedly you would have fared better than in our humble home," said Jack, grimly.

"Why, Jack, you don't think that, do you, dear?" I hastily asked. "It made me feel badly to think my own flesh and blood would abandon me and trust me with strangers, that's all." "That was seventeen years ago tomorrow night," meditated mother, unheeding our conversation. "Yes," I chimed in, anxious to clear the cloud from Jack's forehead; "and you have always called it my birthday, me, too. Let me see," I rattled on; ed? me I must go out and see to the frosting of it, to-night. No, you stay right here. Watch her, Jack, for she's not to see the cake until to-morrow."

I retreated before her laughing com-mand, and seeing how soar Jack still looked, I determined to do my best to make him behave like his own old self again. Perching myself on the arm of his chair I leaned over, trying to catch

"Cross, dear?" I asked, very sweetly. "No," he replied, in a tone that said, "Yes, decidedly so; let me alone." But I was not to be rebuffed. Slipng my arms around his neck I dre hisface around toward mine.

'You're sorry you didn't send me to the Foundlings' Home, aren't you? It's enough to make any one cross to think how he has been troubled for seventeen years just because he was so softhearted over a miserable little baby whose own people didn't care about keeping it. Are you sorry, Jack?'

'Are you, Bird?'
He suddenly straightened up, a look in his dark eyes I had never noticed "What have I to be sorry for?" I asked. "Was I not thrown into the hands of the dearest, kindest mother and brother a girl ever had?" "Yes, dear-that is, we've always meant kindness; but still I am not your Clasping me close in his strong arms he told me how happy I could make him by saying that I loved him. And so strongly did he argue his case that some way I was completely won over to his way of thinking, and before the birthday cake was frosted Jack and I were engaged.

'I've accepted Jack as a birthday gift,' I whispered to mother as I ran out. A radiant look of surprised joy fairly illuminated her dear old face as she comprehended the meaning of my re-

"Oh, happy birthday!" I whispered when to-morrow dawned, and I, awak-

ing, remembered my promise to Jack. "What better gift could I have asked than the gift of dear Jack's love?" Several little tokens were at my breakfast plate, some very expensive too, for since Jack's pictures had begun to sell so well and orders poured in faster than he could execute them he had begun to be quite extravagant. He had gratified an oft-expressed But she did not understand the fasten-

So I slipped it on my finger and when Jack told me to keep it for an engagement until he could procure another it became doubly dear to me. By-and-by, as soon as breakfast was finished, much to my surprise and disappointment, my lover went up to his studio and remained invisible for two

"I'll take your advice," exclaimed. Jack, emphatically.

Then I rushed to my room.

So through Griffith's advice, which Jack seemed so ready to take, my brief little romance was to be shattered. Well, I would never stay and let him see my heart break, too; for I felt sure I never could live through this trouble, so dear had Jack in the role of lover Attorneys otheries, Conveyancres,&c become to me in a few short hours. So, some way-now it all seems like a vague dream to me-I found myself a few hours later wandering aimlessly down a strange street, not knowing or caring where my steps tended. was obliged to cross the street. I remember stepping down and advancing a few steps, of hearing hoarse shouts of warning, feeling a sudden shock, and then all was blank. When I returned to consciousness I
