MRS. MULLEN'S ECONOMY.

'I declare, Elizabeth, our grocery bill this month is outrageous; perfectly exorbitant,' Mr. Mullen said, as he sat back from the table and looked over the bill his wife had just handed him 'It seems to be all right, however, said Mrs. Mullen quietly. 'I looked over the bill carefully; there is nothing charged to us we have not had.'

'Then I must say that we have had an awful sight of groceries, for a family no larger than ours. I don't see how you can possibly make away with so much; here is enough sugar charged in this month's bill to have done my mother, with her large family, half a year; we shall be confirmed dyspeptics, and in the poor-house besides, before we are forty years old, if you don't stop making so much rich cake, and so many pies and puddings. And I don't see why you will persist in trading at Millard's; he's the highest priced man in town, and I've told you time and again. 'I trade there because I get better articles, and you always want the best of everything.

'No, I don't want the best of everything; it's you that wants the best of everything. You are not willing to cook, unless you have the very finest of flour-although there's not half the nutriment in it-and other things accordingly; and then you cook such quantities, there was as much steak left yesterday as was eaten, and who cares for warmed-over steak?"

But we were expecting company yesterday, you remember, and I prepared dinner accordingly,' said Mrs. Mullen.

'O yes, of course there's always some good reason for its costing us more to live than any one else in town,' Mr. Mullen said angrily, as he snatched his hat and started out of doors.

Mr. Mullen was not an unkind husband, nor was he at all inclined to be niggardly. He was fond of good living, on I. C. Ry. Northern Stations by niggardly. He was fond of good living, and not only appreciated his wife's excellent cookery, but knew that she was very saving and economical. But business had been very dull the past week, and when business was dull Mr, Mullen was apt to feel depressed in spirit; and when he felt depressed in spirit, he was very apt to be unreasonable, and inclin- HOWARD ALLEN, - PROPRIETOR ed to blame somebody for his lack of prosperity. He didn't dare to find fault with his partner in business; and it wasn't advisable to scold the clerk.

her alleged extravagance. Of course she knew her hurband didn't mean a word he said, but that didn't prevent it from stinging. Two or three times she had wept bisterly over his unkind words, once or twice she had talked back with considerable vim, to-da; she gone out, she shut her lips together firmly, and went to work.

Mr. Mullen came home to his dinner in excellent spirits. Things had gone well at the store, and dyspepsia, and the poor house were alike forgotten. He chatted pleasantly as he ate rather sparingly of the codfish and potatoes, reserving his appetite for the apple dumplings and delicious sauce that was sure to supplement a fish dinner.

'Now for the dumplings,' he said, as a pushed away his plate, and used his with a boyish flourish quite

'I didn't make any to-day; I thought they didn't agree with you, and I would't make them just for myself,' his wife said kindly.

Mr. Mullen looked disappointed, but spoke cheerfully. 'Ah! yes, it's better for us to do without them, I perceive, if only one knew where to leave off;'and having found a suitable place to leave off-on the first-half of a very plain molasses cookie-Mr. Mullen went down town with an unsatisfied stomach, and a great fear tugging at his heart strings that the good seed sown in the morning had taken deeper root than was desir- GOODS, and trust that or not forget this great fact, viz:

As Mr. Mullen came home to the evening meal, he saw some luscious strawberries temptingly displayed in the store windows. He would have bought some, but supposed his wife had already done so. He was very fond of strawberries, and had often paid an extravagant price for them,—"the COMMERCIAL season was so short, when one could enjoy such luxuries.'

'I see strawberries are in the market, Mr. Mullen said, as he took his seat at the table, and dished out the dried apple sauce.

the economical Mrs. Mullen. 'It would

'Lizzie, what ails this bread?' interrupted Mr. Mullen, holding up a slice for inspection. 'Nothing; only I have been trying a different grade of flour! It is rather dark, but it seems light and sweet.' 'And very nutritious, I dare say'-

Mr. Mullen remembered his own words, and resolved to stand by them. But it looks a little odd; your bread was always so nice and white.' The next morning Mr. Mullen found fault with the butter. 'Why, isn't that butter good?' his wife asked, in indignant surprise. 'The man said it was perfectly splendid, and so cheap—only twenty cents a pound. I got it at the new store just started at First street.' Mr. Mullen ate the rest of his bread bare and in silence. His heart filled with grief, no doubt, at having learned that this tair earth contained "so foul a GREY ALL WOOL FLANNEL AT 25CTS. blot" as a man that would lie about butter. The dinner was very good that day, but there was hardly enough of it. Mrs. Mullen didn't want anything left over, and of course couldn't tell exactly how much would be eaten.

The food for supper was well cooked, but not rich nor dainty enough to be at all objectionable. The next morning Mr. Mullen arose with a terrible goneness at his stomach. He told his wife he wasn't feeling well, and would like some soft boiled eggs for his breakfast. He liked boiled eggs, B. FAIREY. Newcastle. and usually ate three or four. His wife always got her eggs at Anderson's and could rely upon their being fresh. But his countenance fell as he sat down to the table and saw the eggs (there were only two) by his plate. Somehow, they didn't look natural.

'Where did you get these eggs?' he asked, eying them suspiciously.

'I got them at Dean's; and just think only paid ten cents a dozen, and I've been paying Anderson twelve cents all summer. Why there's neither of them good,' she added in a tone of deep re gret, as she saw her husband start for the kitchen door, with a terrible grimace on his face, and the eggs in a saucer. 'Shall I cook you some more?' she kindly asked on his return. 'No, thank you,' was the stiff reply. Mr. Mullen nibbled a cracker, and drank his coffee, which Mrs. Mullen had not the heart to economise on; then he sat back from the table and ooked at his wife.

'Elizabeth,' he said in a tone so calm that it startled her, 'you have been suf. ficiently tried; as an economist, you are a success. I have no fear for the future; should misfortune overtake us, feel assured that you could readily obtain a position as the matron of some 'Home' or you could support the family by keeping a genteel boarding-house.

'But (pathetically) I should not long remain a burden upon your hands; I should soon die-die of starvationdon't think I could possibly survive beyond the third day. And now (cheerfully) I propose that we celebrate your victory by having, this day noon, a regal feast, consisting of such dishes as your judgment and good taste shall dictate. And here take this; there may be some little luxury which your own appetite craves, that you cannot procure at those places,' and giving his wife a hearty kiss, he was gone. It is needless to say that the feast was prepared, and that ample justice was done to it by Mr. Mullen and the friend whom he brought to dinner .-

The same having been seized by me under and by virtue of an Execution issued out of the Nor umberland County Court by John Fraser against the said Owen Hackett. JOHN SHIRREFF. Sheriff's Office, New astle, 2nd Sept., 1886

To the Electors of the County of Northumber land and of the other counties of the North Shore of New Brunswick :-Gentlemen :- Political events that have recently ranspired in the Domimon impress me with the idea that it may not be out of place for me to address you at this time. The Chambly election was, no doubt, a genuine surprise to many of you while that in Haldimand seemed to still urth complicate the situation, so much so that ever our wisest politicians cannot now predict with any precision whether we shall or shall not have a Dominion election this fall. In the midst of such uncertainty it is well that at least one of your fellow-citizens should give no uncertain sound, for whatever may be the existing doubts surrounding the issues of the great political contest that is pending or not pending, whatever may be the opinions you hold respecting the N. P., the administration of the fisheries, the justice of the annexation, there can be no doubt whatever that with the splendid facilities I now have in both machinery and men, I am safe in saying that can manufacture Office, Church and School furniture-such as Desks, Bookcases, Counters, Showcases, Pulpits and School Desks-both in solid workmanship and style, equal and, in some eatures, superior to anything that can be bought n any other town in the Maritime Provinces. On the strength of this assertion I invite any persons in want of such articles to inspect my work and give me a call before going elsewhere. GEO. CASSADY.
