THE GRAHAM GIRL.

BY MARY E. BRUSH.

Well its all over, and I am glad of it, I never want to camp out again as long as I live! Nor does Cara Murray. To think what a lovely time we had anticipated, with Tracy Loring, the greatest catch of the year, along, with only dear, fat, stupid Mrs. Bartlett for our chaperon! There's no knowing what might have happened had it not been for that Graham girl. She was governess to Mrs. Bartlett's two children, Tom and Tiny (the worst young ones that ever breathed!) and Mrs. Bartlett said that she couldn't possibly think of trusting herself and precious little ones into the wilderness unless her dear, faithful Helen went along. So, of course, Helen Graham went, and so did Tracy Loring, Cara Murray, the two Avery girls, and their collegian cousins, Max and Will Collins.

It was jolly fun at first, for during the journey on the cars Cara and I managed to secure Tracy ourselves. Then we went by stage ten miles to a lonely farmhouse—a "jumping off place," as Tracy called it—where we were to get the guide and boat which were to take us up Lake Moosetic—dear me, I can never remember those horrid Indian names! But never mind. Tracy said that he didn't just like the looks of our guide, but Cara and I thought him real romantic. His name was Francisco, and he was kind of brigandish-looking, you know, with flashing, black eyes, swarthy complexion and long black hair. And he wore a sort of picturesque Indian costume. He talked a good deal to us girls, and rolled his eyes, and made up jingling bits of poetry that didn't sound bad. Tom Bartlett said that he smelled of onions and poor whiskey, but Tom was always making horrid speeches. However, this time, he wasn't so far out of the way, for if you'll believe it, we hadn't been camping out a week before that rascally guide went off and left us in the midst of a howling wilderness fifteen miles from any living soul. Took our boat too! And we had to make our own fires, and cook our own meals, and all that—things which we had paid him to do. Mrs. Bartlett is over forty, but she doesn't know a thing about housekeeping, for her husband's sister, who lives with her, sees to everything. As for the Avery girls, they never enter a kitchen, nor do Cara and I. Tracy Loring knew more than we did, for he could make delicious coffee as well as broil fish. It was late in the afternoon, with a cold rain and wind storm coming on, so that it wouldn't have been prudent for the gentleman to undertake the long tramp through the woods back to the Giles farm house. Cara and I felt wretchedly. In the first place, we were conscious of looking drabbled and shabby—there's nothing like that to lower a woman's spirit. You see, we had no idea what a wild crazy place the woods were, and so we had worn, dainty flimsy suits, whose ruffles and puffs had soon become crushed and crumpled. The Averys were in the same fix. As for that Graham girl, she wore plain blue navy flannel gown, with short skirt and blouse waist. We had all made fun of her behind her back, but after a day or two we were forced to acknowledge that she looked far more dainty and tidy than ourselves. Anyhow, Tracy Loring seemed to think her attractive, for, from the very first, he treated her as an equal with Cara and I, and she laughed and talked as freely as he did. She never seemed to mind the least hint, not even when one day Cara threw out something about working-people knowing their places. At first, though, she drew herself up rather stately (she had a fine figure!) and looked Cara straight in the eyes as if to find out what she meant, then, a smile began dimpling the corners of her mouth, and she sang out mischievously:

"When Adam delved and Eve span,
Who then was the gentleman?"

But to go back to the time the guide left us. We had to have supper, of course, but what and how?

'I've got some fish,' said Tracy; 'and I see that Max has picked some fine blackberries. I can make the coffee, but the rest of the culinary affairs I'll have to leave in the hands of you ladies.'

'Oh, my goodness gracious!' groaned Mrs. Bartlett, I never cooked a meal in all my life.'

We all echoed her words, except Helen Graham, who jumped up briskly, saying: 'I'll try to fix something, though it won't be very elaborate, for I fear our resources are limited. Pray, Mr. Loring, what does our larder contain?'

'Humph! Mostly canned goods, I believe. There are some loaves of bread, but,' with a sniff, 'they look kind of queer, Miss Graham—they have a pale, whity-green fuzz on the crust! It's very æsthetic-looking, to be sure, but—it doesn't smell good.'

'Heat and moisture have made it mold. Bread molds easily in August weather, and this is over a week old. But I can cut off the crust and toast the inside.'

'That'll be famous! I am so hungry I could eat my boots almost! It rejoices my soul to see a genuinely capable woman—one with a 'knack.' And now, Madame Cook, I'm at your service'—with a low bow. That Graham girl didn't seem a bit impressed—she only giggled, and said coolly, 'You may clean the fish, if you want to,' and Tracy Loring, the heir of one of the richest and most aristocratic families, donned a big towel for an apron, and went out to obey her commands.

Then how she flew around! I rather liked to watch her. She had such a deft, handy way of doing things. Both Clara and I wished that our mothers had taught us something besides fancy things.

She made a rousing fire in the fire place—you see, we had taken up our quarters in a log cabin that, years before, had been occupied by a hermit trapper. It was a rough affair, but just then we were very thankful for it, considering the rain outside. It had turned out so chilly, too, that the fire felt very comfortable, and what with the light, warmth and good supper, we had a very pleasant time. The supper was especially nice. Helen had opened a couple of cans of chicken; this she warmed in the saucepan, and poured it over the toast, gravy and all. Then she wrapped potatoes in leaves and roasted them in the hot ashes; and these, with the fish, coffee and other things, made a meal fit for anybody. The gentlemen praised it up, at any rate, and they paid the Graham girl so many compliments that she actually blushed. It made her look rather pretty, too, and the firelight falling on her brown hair gave it a golden sheen that we women couldn't help envying.

Now, what's to be done?' said young, Max Collins, after supper. 'Some of us have got to tramp back to Giles'farm-house and get another boat'.

'You and I will go, Max,' said Tracy. 'Will can stay here and guard the ladies. We'd better start to-morrow morning, if it's clear.'

The weather was fine next morning, and after an early breakfast (that Graham girl made splendid corn pones), Tracy and Max left us. Poor Mrs. Bartlett actually whimpered when they went off.

'It seems so awful to be left alone—ship-wrecked in this howling wilderness,' she said.

'That's rather a mixed metaphor!' exclaimed Will; 'and not at all complimentary to my bravery! You know, my dear madam, that I will defend you as long as I have a drop of blood left—if these warlike mosquitoes leave me any to begin with.'

Will is a real nice fellow (lovely to lead the German with!) but he isn't cut out for a wood-man, and about the first thing he did, after Tracy an Max had gone, was to tumble down a rocky place—he was getting some rare ferns for Sadie Avery—and break his leg! Well, I don't know what we would have done had it not been for that Graham girl! We were all about ready to go into hysterics, but she spoke out sharp and commanding, and told us that we must help her. We somehow got Will into the house—it must have looked ridiculous to have seen us all pulling and tugging at him—and on a cot, and then Helen went to Mrs. Bartlett's medicine chest which she had brought along on acconnt of the children, and got him something that would keep him quiet and prevent fever. Then there was nothing else to do but wait until Tracy returned; and oh, it seemed ages.

In the meantime, something still more startling took place. We were all resting a bit after our exertions, when suddenly in rushed Tom and Tiny, saying in scared whispers, for Will was dozing, and we motioned them to be quiet:

"Oh, that Francisco has come back! He is coming up from the beach, and he acts awful queer! He swore at us, he did."

'What! the guide!' said Mrs. Bartlett. 'Girls, he must be drunk or crazy! What shall we do? Oh! what shall we do! Poor Will can't protect us!'

'And he mustn't be disturbed, either,' said Helen Graham, decidedly. 'We'll have to settle with Francisco ourselves. He does look crazy or drunk,' going to the door and looking out at the rolling, swaggering figure coming up the pebbly path.

It was quite evident that he was drunk—unfortunately not enough to make him clumsy and helpless, but enough to be ugly and reckless. His boldness showed that he knew we were without a defender.

Helen Graham stepped outside the door, one hand hanging down in the folds of her gown. Her face was white, but otherwise she seemed calm.

'What do you want, Francisco?' she called out, in steady tones.

He swore like a pirate as he answered:

'Now, look here, girl, you needn't put on any airs! There ain't no one but that crippled dandy in there! I've come to have my just dues. The boss, Loring, wouldn't allow me any whiskey, and so I went off and helped myself. Now I've come back to settle up! You women have got to fork over what money and valuables you've got!' and with that the ugly brute drew a step nearer.

I never knew Helen Graham's eyes could flash so. 'Stand back!' she cried. She raised her right hand from the folds of her gown, and I caught a steely gleam. It was Will's revolver!

Francisco didn't relish that little shining weapon being pointed at him, and he cringed down like a whipped cur.

'Now,' continued Helen, 'you go and sit down under that tree!'

'Oh—I'll leave now—I won't trouble you any more,' he mumbled.

'Do as I tell you—sit down!' she said, sharp and stern, and sit down he did; and then she mounted guard over him, the pistol still in her hand. We begged her to let him go.

'No,' she said; 'I can't trust him out of our sight! He's mean enough to do almost anything! He's got to stay here until the men come and he can be placed under the arm of the law.'

So watch him she did all that long afternoon. It was dreary waiting. Not until the silver sheen of the lake grew purple with the long mountain-shadows did help come. Then, far down the lake, come a cheery 'Yo—o—del!' and two boats swept around the curve. Tracy, Max, Farmer Giles and a trusty guide were in them. And scarcely had all our excited explanations been given, when, what do you suppose;—that Graham girl fainted away as white and limp as any ordinary woman! There was a good deal in the expression of Tracy's face as he caught her in his arms, and Cara and I felt that our chances were small—a man never looks like that unless he is holding the woman he wants for his wife.

Well to return to the prose part: we somehow got back to civilization again. Poor Will was placed in the doctor's care, and the poetical but erratic Francisco was handed over to the tender mercies of the constable. As for ourselves—dear me! what with stones, and, briars, and underbrush, worms, snakes, and mosquitoes, to say nothing of tipsy guides and plucky governesses—we, Cara and, I as I said before, never want to camp out again—Frank Leslie's Illustrated.

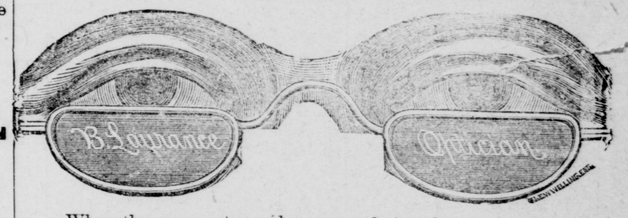
LAURENCE'S SPECTACLES.

When are Spectacles Required?



When the eyes water or become so fatigued by use as to be obliged to be frequently closed or relieved by viewing different objects.

When more light is required than formerly.

When the letters of a book appear to blend with one another or to become double.

When the lamp has to be placed between the eye and the object.

When objects cannot be seen without holding them at an increased distance.

When much difficulty is found in threading a needle.

When the eyes appear confused as though they had a mist before them.

When black specks seem floating in the sight.

When any of the above indications arise all affectation should be laid aside and a pair of Laurences Spectacle's or eye Glasses should be worn immediately.

Good fitting glasses are a great comfort. Our facilities for testing the sight and suiting the age are not surpassed anywhere.—Prices to suit everybody.
