"It was at the Monmouth assizes, in 18-, that a case was tried which became the talk of the neighborhood and country for years after. My father was sit ting in the court of the assistant judge, when a rote was brought to him from a riend in he adjoining court, asking him to come and hear a case of more than usual interest, the facts of which were

Some time before a farmer's house near Monmouth had been broker into and robbed by men disguised and masked, the farmer murdered and his servant shockingly ill-treated. Among other things which were stolen were ously inlaid with malachite, heirlooms of the family; and although unremitting search was made, and the description of the lost articles made widely known, no trace of the murderers could be found.

"A month or two after the murder, however, a police officer in going through a common lodging house in Bristol, noticed a dissipated looking sailor lying on a pallet and resting his in this accursed jail." head on a bundle. He asked him what it contained and was told that it was only "his kit." The officer, not satisfied, opened the bundle, and almost liams. Well, my man, I suppose you the first things to fall out were two brooches of silver and malachite Struck by their curious beauty, and wondering how such a wretched looking fellow could have become possessed of them, he suddenly remembered the advertisement and description of the stolen articles.

"How did you come by these?" he inquired.

"The sailor replied: "By chance. When I came ashore some time ago. with plenty of money in my pocket, I met an old seaman who was down in his to the judge, the captain said : "Every luck, and he offered to sell me these things, which had belonged to his rue, my lord.
