The Editor and his "Friends."

An editor died and slowly wended his way down to where he supposed a warm reception awaited him. The devil met him and said: "For many years thou hast porne the blame of bad spelling that the orinter has gotten off in thy paper; the paper was gotten out at $1.50 a year; alas the $1.50 failed to come in. The printer has be-deviled thee for wages every Saturday night, when thou hadst been neglected all the week by thy subscribers. Yes, men have taken thy paper without paying for it, and have cursed thee for not getting up a better paper. They have also tried to get thee to accept $1 a year, when they knew $1.50 was thy price for it, and that it was really worth more. Thou hast been called "dead" by the freight conductors when thou hast shown thy pass to their envious gaze. Thou hast done much work for public men, for churches, for schools and for other friends who have not even thanked thee. Everybody has looked to thee to help them along and few have been thoughtful enough to care how thou should get the money necessary to pay thy way. All these things hast thou borne in silence. Thou canst not come in here. Heaven thy home." And he fired him. And as he did so, the devil murmured to himself: 'If I had let him in here he would have been dunning his delinquent subscribers, upbraiding those who beat him out of advertising, reproaching the politicians he created and from whose ingratitude he suffered, and thereby raised such a discord gone forever."
