THE TELEPHONE GIRL.

'Well,' said Mr. Roland Wayne, when he came into his office, after several days' illness with neuralgia, which affected him whenever the east wind blew, 'you got someone for a telephone -did you, Burns?'

'Yes, sir,' the clerk replied.' The young lady has been here since Tues-

'Young lady!' exclaimed Mr. Wayne, testily. 'Why do you get a woman? A broker's office is no place for a wo-

'Why, you see, sir,' said Burns, with an obvious embarassment and apprehensive glances towards a light oak partition, behind which the new operator sat in concealment, 'you didn't say anything about that-only that Mr. Richards had his hands full with the wires, and that there'd have to be some one to take charge fof the telephone;so I-'

'That is just like you, Burns,' said Mr. Wayne, stamping back into his private office. 'Any one else would have known better.'

'Why, you see, sir,' said Burns, defensively, as he followed him back, 'I dldn't think it would make much difference. The young lady is very capable, and she seemed to want the place so badly. She is very poor, sir, and supports her mother. I know something about her, you see.'

'Oh! Some flame of yours, I suppose, Burns? Very nice arrangement, for you, no doubt.'

ten that. Though,' he added humorously, 'that doesn't always make a difference. Well, try her, anyhow. Where's the mail, please?' 'I'll tell you what, Burns,' one the other clerks observed, when that individual finally emerged from Mr. Wayne's office, 'the boss is in a humor, isn't he?' 'He's all right,' Burns answered. warmly. 'He has given me a ticket to always twinging with neuralgia if he loses his temper now and then.' Roland, meanwhile, had taken up his pen, and was writing a lengthy account of Brisket's new deal in P. Y. & 'If the cat jumps this way, 'he said, in conclusion, 'the bears have got him sure. Danbury is on our side. He has given Brisket the cold shoulder, and, if I'm not mistaken, somebody will get wofully left. I don't intend that it shall be I. If everything goes as I think it will, I shall pocket two nundred thousand dollars, and then 1 am going to get out of the brokerage business. It doesn't suit me, and my heaith is so poor that I must get away somewhere or I shall go to pieces.'

'I beg pardon, sir,' said a soft, tremulous voice at his elbow. 'I am Miss Archer, Mr. Wayne.'

Roiand dropped his pen, and rose politely as he saw a slight graceful figure in black standing before him.

'Be seated, Miss Archer,' he said, with a smile which no man could have withheld when he saw the fairness of her young face and that shy, sweet flush on her cheeks. 'What can I do for

'I am the telephone operator,' she began, rapidly, and with a nervousness she could not conceal. 'I-I could not help hearing what you said to Mr. Burns a little while ago, and-and I came to say that if you are not satisfied to have me stay in the office, you need only say so.'

'Not satisfied Roland echoed, in manifest confusion. 'Well, really, you know I have not given you a trial; and as to what I said a little while ago, I am sorry, Miss Archer. I am afraid you will have to set it down to neuralgia. I am quite willing to have you stay, if Second 1

But if what you say is true—if a broker's cided to get out altogether.' office is no place for a woman-I-I would rather not stay.'

How Roland Wayne abused himself when he thought of his careless words, and then marked how her lips quivered, how her eyelids drooped to keep back the unshed tears!

'I think I spoke too hastily, Miss would you be so kind as to recommend Archer,' he said. 'A lady's place is me?' where she makes it. We are not a lot of savages,' he added, with a warm | mother,' said Roland, bowing to Mrs. smile. 'If you remain here, I think I Archer. 'I am going abroad. 'Then stay, by all means,' said Ro- had given her a situation as-his wife.

And, to the edification of his clerks, he got up and opened the door for her Dr. J. S. Benson when she went out.

After that, he often caught himself listening to the soft yet distinct voice in another room holding conversation Duke Street, - Chatham over the 'phone. When he was at home with one of his attacks of neuralgia, and had to communicate with the office by wire, he often remarked how well he could hear Iss Archer's voice, when all the others of the Post office in Chatham on the 23rd day of September next at twelve o'clock noon, the picce of land in Chatham bounded Easterly by the Foundry Lane Northerly by land formerly owned by the late Philip Wall deceased, Westerly by land owned by Moses Connors and Southerly by a road or lane, being the property formerly occ Miss Archer's voice, when all the others ebbed away into a Babel of sound. when he was kept a prisoner very indo without her-now especially. what's that?' The shrill alarm of the telephone summoned him across the room. 'There is no one at the office, he thought, taking up the receiver. 'I wonder what's up now? Hello! Wayne!

Who are you?' 'It is Helen Archer, Mr Wayne,' said a voice which he knew quite well. 'Why, what are you doing in the office at this time of night?' he exclaimed involuntarily.

'I am not at the office-that is, not at your office. I am at the Central station. Can you hear me?'

'I have something important to tell you. Our wire got crossed with Mr Brisket's to-day, and I could hear every word said over it. I could not understand what they were talking about, only Mr. Brisket was talking to a man named 'Danbury.' 'Danbury!' exclaimed Wayne, in great excitement.

'They were talking about bonds, and said a lot of things I couldn't comprehend: but at last your name was mentioned. 'This will put Wayne in a hole,' Mr Brisket said. 'Yes,' said Mr Danbury, 'it'll bury him alive. It is a good thing he's shelved to-night. There is no danger, I suppose, of his
