AFTER TWELVE YEARS.

How do you like her, Jud? Young Doctor Galbraithe looked up at his cousin a second before answering. If she were worth ahundred thousand

I would marry her to-morrow. She is a girl who, ten years from now, will do honor even to a Galbraithe Alice was silent, and outside the open door, in the hall, Carmie had come all unheard in her slippered feet, but not unhearing, and stood silent also. She thing of the superb power that Judson was not vain, so felt a strange delight in this man's words, cruel and heartless as they were; but she was proud and sensitive and her eyes flashed, and some-Galbraithe prophesied for ten years hence thrilled her as she stood there. then, nothing but a girl, she shivered as she thought how easily she could have been won by this handsome, careless man had she been wealthy-won, but not loved; and she crept silently away, wondering if she could be anything to be proud of-anything but a poor, paid

Thirty, to-day! Once I should have considered myself old at this age, with the best of my life passed, and little before me to enjoy; but now I am very happy, thankful, and content.

Carmie Brownell was looking across the blue sea waters, her hands resting upon the railing of the balcony, her calm, sweet face grave and thoughtful. The climbing ivy and rose threw fluttering leaf shadows and sunshine upon her tall, lithe form; and people on the beach below turned to look on the unconscious figure for a second time.

Who is she, Leicester? Miss Brownell.

Is that all there is to say of her? No: I might talk a day or two of her, and you would be as little acquainted. You are unusally reticent. She must have incurred your lordship's displeasure, and you punish by ignoring her.

We are good friends: but I knew that your questions were prompted by idle curiosity, and thought I would wait until you met her. She has won a fair fame and considerable wealth, I believe by untiring patience and labor. She has triumphed over every obstacle, met trouble and disappointment that would have crushed a woman less brave, and now, from it all she brings, instead of a cynical, selfish nature, one so thoroughly pure that men are made better for her living. She is wealthy, famous, but still unmarried? Yes; even an old maid, if you like.

But no one ever thinks of that. Philip Leicester frowned, and there was a ring of displeasure in his sweet, strong voice. It angered him te hear this cool questioning. even from a friend.

Doctor Galbraithe, at his side, handsome fascinating, worldly-wise, and a trifle worldly-wild, turned again to look at the white-robed figure.

They sauntered back an hour later, just as Miss Brownell tightened the reins over her high stepping blacks. Those are magnificent animals, by Jove! exclaimed Galbraithe.

Yes; she handles them perfectly, too. And Philip's dark eyes flashed, and a wonderful light swept over his face, with the smile and bow he gave Carmie Brownell! while she gave a glance at both, but a smile to only one, as she Monuments. dashed by.

And the second time that day the fastidious Judson Galbraithe turned to look at a woman.

He had quite forgotten her, however, until, he saw her that evening in a little crowd in the large drawing room. Philip Leicester was one of the crowd, and Galbraithe made his way towards them to be introduced. She rose, smiling, gracious, thoroughly a lady, with no pretence to girlishness. There were valley lilies at her belt, valley lilies in the soft lace at her coiled hair.

der; her face one that changed with every thought, but was ever pure and

The summer passed, as all summers have a way of doing, and one night, when the season was almost ended, Carmie Brownell stood upon the terrace in the moonlight, listening to the roar and moan of the waters.

Judson Galbraithe found her there looking like some still, restful picture but she turned with her old smile as he

He spoke with a shade of bitterness, for what did hers make his own careless, wordly one appear?

I was only thinking of the starting point. Shall we return? Not unless you wish it, for I have wanted to see you alone, but have not been able to do so. You must know what it is I have to tell, for no man can be with you without learning to ove and respect you. My life is not worthy to offer, but you can make me what you will. Oh, Carmie, I love you. I love you! Will you say that you love me and will be my wife? His face was pale with the great passion that thrilled his soul, his eyes were burning and bright as they searched her face for one tender look, and his hands closed upou hers with a fierce, o'ermastering grasp; but she was looking away from his face, beyond the line of harbor lights and the very sea itself, as she answered slowly. Is it myself or my hundred thousand that you would marry?

All the scorn and subdued feelings of those twelve years rang out in the clear proud voice.

Yourself! What do I care for your wealth? Come to me penniless; but for your love, I will work for both; only tell me I can, dearest.

Wait until I repeat your words of twelve years ago. Let me show you how well I remember. You said of Carmie Brownell, a poor and friendless girl, were she worth a hundred thousand I would marry her to-morrow. I am worth it now, and you come saying that you love me. Had you said so then, the girl Carmie would have be-lived with a faith the woman has not. I am gladbyou didn't say this then, even if you cared for me; you did me a greater service, for after hearing your opinion of me I crept away, and after the first outbreak I determined to make my life worth living, even if it might not be a Galbraithe; and the words that wounded so cruelly at first proved the incentive and watchward to something better than I then dared dream. Years ago I should have considered your offer to me to-night the best of all. and would have thought myself avenged but now I am only sorry that any one should suffer through me. The sweet, earnest voice was silent: the waves moaned and sobbed on the sands below like some doomed helpless soul, and the music floated out to them wild and sweet-dying in a crash and wail of anguish.

Is there no hope, if you have forgiven my foolish, mercenary words? Oh, Carmie, let me live for you, and prove my love by that !

She turned with a face as white as his in the moonlight, and a look of pain in her grave eyes; then, very softly, with a world of sad tenderness in her voice, I am engaged to marry Philip Leicester: we have cared for each other a long time.

And then Leicester's tall form came upon the terrace. He took Carmie's hands upon his arm, and drew her soft shawl around her with a proud air of possession; while Carmie, ever thoughtful for this strong man's passion and the sorrow that had settled like darkness upon him, led Philip down the steps and the moonlight to walk in the glory of perfect love together.
