IN THE GLASS.

The vicar of Slapton, the Rev. Herbert Gardner, was the happy father of some half a dozen children, the eldest of whom, Mattie, was a charming girl of 20.

Mattie's ideas of the world were drawn from occasisional visits to neighboring country town, for there was very little society in the village; but though unsophisticated, she was a frank. outspoken girl full of life and spirits and a great favorite.

As yet she had been free from "hear disease," though the lubberly son of a neighboring squire had paid court to her, and been promptly sent about his business.

It was about this time that a young surgeon, looking for practice, determin ed to settle down in Slapton. As matter of course he and Mattie often met in the house of the poor, and al though not a word of love passed between them, people began to associate their names together, and to speak of what might happen as a certainty.

One day when Mattie was, as usual among her roses, a servant came to say that Dr. Robertson had asked for her father, and, as he was from home, for her. When she entered the room with her basket of roses on her arm, the doctor might well be excused if he wondered which was fairer-the roses in th basket or the rose with the basket. such thoughts passed through his mind he quickly put them aside, for he said

"I came to ask Mr. Gardner if he would step down to old Silas Jones'. who is very ill with fever. They are poor, and any help you could give them would be of more use than medicine." 'Papa is away,' she said, 'and will not be back until to-morrow, but I will get some beef tea ready for him.' 'Nothing could be better,' said the doctor. And as I am going by the house, I will take it myself, for fear there might be an infection. But Mattie would not consent to shirk her duty, so they went on the errand together. From that day the doctor was a pleasant memory to the girl, and though she tried to persuade herself that she did not love him, yet she knew it was something more than friendship which stirred her heart.

The doctor had gone away for a visit to a neighboring town for a week or so, when one day going by the office she saw his house-keeper standing in the door with a paper in her hand. The old woman looked up and said:

'Laws-a-mussy, Miss Mattie, but do'ee just read this paper. My owd eyes blena so good as they oncest was,' and the old lady held out a crumpled news-

And Mattie read:

'On the 24th inst., at the parish church, Manchester, James Robertson, M. D., only son of Peter Robertson, M. R. C. S. and L. S. A., of Manchester, to Sarah Eiizabeth, daughter of the late Isaac Jefferson, of Bolton.'

For a moment Mattie was speechless with mingled feelings. Then came the reflection that the garrulous old woman must not see her pain. And summoning up all her resolution she said: 'If you write to him wish him much happiness for me.' In the solitude of her chamber she looked into her heart and learned her secret. This man, who was another's husband, had made himself dearer to her than anyone on earth could be. and she had been mistaken in supposing that he cared for her.

One morning she heard that the doctor had come home. She was standing amongst the roses with a very sad heart, when she saw Dr. Robertson passing up the road, with a lady. He lifted his hat to her, and she tried to return his salutation as she would that of any other friend, but somehow the warm blood came to her cheeks, and it was but a stiff and unfriendly little bow that she gave him. And while she stood thinking of it all, and wondering why she should be so unhappy, she heard footsteps behind her on the gravel walk, and turning saw Dr. Robertson advancing eagerly toward her. Again the crimson tide flooded her face, making her look very lovely in her confusion. But she managed to stammer out something about 'glad to see you,' when the doctor broke in with:

'Not half so glad as I am to see you. I have been to a wedding since I left MARBLE, Slapton and enjoyed my holiday immensely. 'Yes, I know,' she said; 'I saw your wife standing with you this morning. 'Did you, indeed?' he said, while a smile of quiet joy lit up his face. 'Where did you see my wife, Mattie?' 'In the road,' said Mattie.

'No, that was my sister,' he replied. 'In the newspaper,' she urged. 'That was my cousin,' he explained. 'Come here. Did you look in the glass this morning?'

'Yes,' whispered Mattie. 'Then that's where you saw my wife

-if you saw her anywhere.' And, of course, that settled it, and you all know what happened as well a I can tell you.

The Red-Haired Boy.

A New York merckant, who is Sunday-school teacher was called upon for a speech at a great Sunday-school meeting out in the West. He said: I'll tell you a story of a beggar boy. I started out one fine Sunday morning to get some recruits for my SOLAR TIME SOLAR TIME SOLAR TIME. class. At the corner of the street I met a barefooted boy without hat or coat. His hair was fiery red, and looked as if it had never been combed. I asked the boy if he would come to school. No sir, was his sharp reply.

You ought to go to Sunday-school. I said kindly.

What for ? he asked. We teach boys to be good, I said. But I don't want to be good, he said.

Why don't you want to be good? I asked earnestly. Because I am burgry, was the quick reply. It is now nine o'clock, I said, looking at my watch. Haven't you had any breakfast yet?

No sir. Where do you live? Up the alley there, with aunty; she's

Will you eat som; gingerbread and crackers if I go and get some?

Yes, sir, that I will, and be glad to get 'em. I got some and set them before him. He ate them in a way which showed how keenly hungry he was. I asked him if he would like some more. 'A little more if you please, sir,' said the boy. I got a fresh supply and set them before him. I waited till he had done eating, then I said: My boy, will you go to school with

You've been so kind to me, sir, said he, I'll go anywhere with you. Please wait till I take what's left of the gingerbread round to aunty, and then I'll go

He returned directly to the side-walk, where I was waiting for him, and went | Chatham, March, 21st 1887 with me to school. He had never been to school before. He thought of school as a place where boys had to hold out their hands to be slapped with a ruler. and had their hair pulled and their ears pinched. But when he found himself in the hands of a pleasant-looking young lady, who treated him kindly, and said nothing about his shabby clothes, he was greatly surprised.

He became a regular attendant. He told all the boys of his acquaintance about the school, and persuaded many of them to attend. About two years after this some boys from New York were sent out West and distributed among the farmers. My red-haired boy was sent among them. I used to hear of him for a while, that he was getting on and doing well. I have lost sight of him for some years now. but I have no doubt he is doing well, wherever he is. In a moment a tall, good-looking gentleman with red hair stood up in the meeting and said: Ladies and gentlemen, I am the red-haired beggar boy, of New York, who ate that gentleman's ginger bread. I have lived in the West for years, and have prospered. I am now a rich man. I own five hundred acres of as good land as the sun shines on. My horses and carriage are at the door; and, when the meeting is over, I shall be happy to take my old friend to my home, where he will be welcome to stay as long as he pleases. I am a member of a church and superintendent of a Sunday school, and I owe all that I have in this world, and all that I hope
