Chest Protectors.

A LOVER AT LAST.

I was the daughter of a Memphis physician, and his only child. In my seventh year I lost my mother, but the poignacy of my childish grief was in some measure alleviated when six months later my father brought me a little playmate of my own age. She was his ward, and we grew from childhood to girlhood beneath the same roof, and for my part I loved Natalie Chester as a sister. How beautiful she was in the first flush of her peerless woman. hood !

'I wonder will he be the latest conquest?' I asked myself, when for the first time Lindon Stafford and she stood face to face. He was my father's young assistant, and perhaps the only man she ever met who, panoplied in armor of cold indifference, seemed insensible to her charms. And I know this indiffer ence piqued a vanity that the flattery of tongues had fanned into a passion said to me one afternoon, 'that our young doctor is a man of singularly phlegmatic temperment?' 'He has never made love to you, Natalie,' I answered dryly. Yet it ought to be a novel sensation to meet a man who does not fall in love and worship

Her cheeks flushed slightly but she retorted with a laugh: Would it not be a more real sensation still to constrain him into idolatry? They say that natures the least demonstrative are capable of the strongest feelings and that the spark once applied to the latent fire you are treated to confligration.'

She spoke lightly but the glance that flashed from the dusky beauty of her eyes convinced me that if all the devices of a fascinating woman did not fail her she would bring Lindon Stafford to her feet. Who watched Dr. Stafford keenly saw that he was struggling with a passion that he felt would only bring him unhappiness.

But the hour had come when the strong man's soul would be tried in the crucible of a great affliction, and Lindon Stafford, standing face to face with uncompromising necessity, dare no longer fritter away existence in a dream of love. The terrible scourge of yellow fever had swept over Memphis and within a week it presented all the appearance of a city of the dead. In their abject terror the people fled, they cared not whither, and fear, for the time being, crushed all noble instincts of humanity from hearts where craven selfishness predominated.

My father's first thought was of Na. talie's safety, and to this end he telegraphed to Miss Chester's other guardian, who was then a resident in the Northern States. In due time that gentleman arrived to carry his beautiful ward and me far from the reach of the impending | 14th March, 1887. danger, but no remonstrance, no intreaty could induce me to desert what I conceived to be my post of duty. Shall I ever forget the night when Natalie left us. Before bidding her good-bye I hurried up stairs for a parcel she had forgotten, and returned in a minute or so to find Dr. Stafford in the room. paused outside the door.

as, with downcast eyes, she held out her hand. 'You must think me very cowardly on remaining.' 'Miss Craig's place is by her father's side, 'he answered; 'but it would be madness in your friends to incur the risks that could bring no possible good to any one, and then you are too young and beautiful to die.' 'And if this parting should be forever what would you say to me, Dr. Staf-'I would say farewell-only farewell, he replied evasively, as he released her

Her eyes looked into his, and a cry escaped him as he caught her in his arms, and if a man's love ever went out to a woman it was in that lingering kiss he pressed upon her lips. I turned away and, with trembling limbs and sinking heart, stole quietly up stairs, for I had learned to love this man even with a hopelessness that intensified a passion that had changed the current of my life into a channel of bitterness and sorrow. I am not going to linger over the days that followed when, as a hospital nurse, I tried to forget my folly. Within two weeks the summons came to the only one that loved me and I was left an orphan. Dr. forget my folly. Within two weeks the loved me and I was left an orphan, Dr. Stafford was also stricken down, and I nursed him through his illness to recovery, and when the scourge at length had passed away I found myself alone and almost friendless in the world.

One day Lindon Stafford, while still The HOUSE and PREMISES in Chatham at present occupied by MRS. F. J. LETSON pale and emaciated, came to me and asked me to be his wife. I knew too well he did not love me. I knew his every thought was with the beautiful Natalie in her Northern home; but, oh, my God; I could not let him leave me, and in the Dwelling House blind fatalism of a woman's love I cheated myself into the belief that in time I would win his heart. And so we were married, and the bridal kiss he gave me, in its coldness, chilled my lips and heart. But I did not marry him to indulge in ! vain regrets, and Lindon Stafford was too loya! a gentleman, too sensitive to truth and honor, to be other than the kindest husband. The first year of my wedded life was drawing to a close, when one morning I received a letter from Natalie. She was coming south with her guardian for the winter, and would spend a day or two with us, she wrote. She remained a week with us -- for me a week of mental torture, for,

I said, my husband lingered so often her side I feared the smouldering fire of an unfcrgotten love had burned flames again within his breast. It was Christmas Eve, and Natalie kissed me in bidding me good-by. Oh! the treason of a woman's kiss to a woman, I thought, as I watched her dark eyes turned to my husband's face when he took his seat beside her in the carriage to leave her at the depot. Motionless and mute as if grief had turne! me to stone, I stood beside the windsw and looked out on the dismal street. And as the minutes passed this maddenng thought occurred to me: Would my husband, the husband that I loved. HAV FOD CATE desert now me for the beautiful Natalie: TAY FUR SALE. Don't injure your sight by using a common would his bonor and levelity be forget would his honor and loyality be forgotten in an unholy passion?

My hand and cheek and brow were deathly cold, and yet my brain was on fire. The objects on the street had, to | April,5th 1887.

my vision, grown blurred and indistinct, and I turned to totter to a chair as Lindon noiselessly entered the room. There was a tender sadness in his eyes as he looked upon my pale face, and with the sobbing cry of, 'Oh, my husband, my husband!' I sank into his outstretched arms.

'Myrtle, my wife,' said he, 'when a year ago I stood before the altar and swore to love you until death there was a perjury upon my tongue. Even then an image that was not yours was enshrined within my heart, and the LIME, haunting eyes of Natalie Chester seemed to mock my firm resolve to be at least a faithful husband. You may have known my secret, poor, patient wife, and yet reproach or taunt has never passed your lips. Well, I've met Natalie Chester again, to learn my passion was but a frenzy that has burned itself to ashes. And now this Christmas Eve, sweet wife, when every heart 'Does it occur to you, Myrtle,' she throb that beats against your own is yours, I ask you to forgive me and forget the past, for I know such love as yours could pardon even a greater

I brushed his hair back from his splendid brow, and almost as shyly as a girl kissed his lips. In my husband I had found a lover at last.
