BY MRS. M. L. RAYNE.

His real name was Paul, but before if he was going to die. we knew that we had fastened upon him the diminutive by which he was The doctor was giving her an anæsthetic always known. And he was just a and counting her pulse in another "Little Chap" after all.

He used to play continually about would kill her. His father held one the halls in the big hotel where we lived that summer, and always by himself. Somehow the other children ized tones: "My boy! my boy! were not attracted to him; he could not romp as they did, because he was a little lame; hip disease, the nurse said, caused by a fall in infancy.

Perhaps it was his lameness, which was very slight, however, that gave him the odd, old look, which impelled us to call him Little Chap, instead of ing down our cheeks, for oh! we saw some more endearing name.

He was never morose or peevish. From morning until night he sang and whistled like any mocking bird, picking up by ear any catchy tune he heard, the old new song : and trilling it in a sweet little voice up nd down the long corridors where he walked and played for exercise.

"Lemme mail your letters," he would say cheerfully. It was quite a little trip for him down to the office, and he preferred usually the longer and more cirdecent of the elevator.

At first-how ashamed I am to think of it now -- we were afraid to trust him, and one day when he was given some money for a small purchase, we counted the change.

"Is it all right?" he asked in a little grieved voice.

"Of course it is," I said quickly, pad? "only there will be I0 cents too many, unless you take this,' and I proffered him a bit of silver.

Instantly the small hands were clasped behind his back, and his sensitive mouth quivered: "I have a bank full of money," he said proudly. "It's on the mantel in our parlor."

Then we began to understand him. He just wanted "to do and to do," like the little man in the story, and he did not want to be paid for it.

Meanwhile "wonderment guesses," who was his father, who was his mother? The first we seldom saw. He was who looked as if he had walked in the and halted a little to accommodate himself to the faltering step, but he was always in a solemn hurry to go somewhere or do something.

pretty. We had pitied him, supposing she was his step mother; but no, Paul was her very own. She went out a great deal, to ride, to walk, to evening parties, and when at home she was either resting or dressing, or there was company—poor Little Chap!

Wherever she went she left a trail of glory in her wake. Sometimes it was fragments of feather trimming that floated in the air like the Princess Thistledown. Sometimes it was a rainbow glory of irridescent beads from the hem of her garments, that dropped along her pathway in shining profusion. "Don't touch me, Paul," we would hear her say to Little Chap, "can't you

"He is so tiresome," she would say apologetically when she condescended to notice us. "He will worry you to death, if you allow him. You have no idea what a child he is! Why, he actually wanted to join the Salvation army." We all langhed, but his mother did not seem to think it a matter of mirth.

"I expect something dreadful will happen to him! she said one day, as she shook her laces and feathers into a Papers by addressing fashionable flutter.

Poor Little Chap! We thought the worst had happened to him in having such a mother, and yet, she was not wicked-only weak and thoughtless. But evil is wrought by want of thought As well as want of heart."

She belleved she had done her duty HOTSE in giving him a good nurse. One day she said: "When he is older I intend TYPE BEST EXTERNAL REMEDY before the to make a companion of him. Mr. Swollen and Stiff Joints. Scratches, Cracked and Revere is so busy he cannot spend much time with me, so Paul will be very Bruises of all kinds.

So gradually it came about that we nearly adopted Little Chap. He was hungry for music and our youngest sang all his favorite pieces. It was a 125 bbls. Cook's FRIEND, patent, constant question with him if there 125 were any new songs. A new song made | 125 him happy for a week; then he wanted | 125 song to the traveling public he met in the halls, to the bell-boys, the porter, anyone who would listen to him. Then NEWCASTLE DRUG STORE somebody gave him a grotesque little book with flags and military shields on the cover. It was filled with the songs of the Salvation army. No money could buy it from him.

"I cannot imagine where the child gets such plebian ideas," said his mother. "Why, his father is one of the Boston Reveres. I am sure he doesn't take it from him."

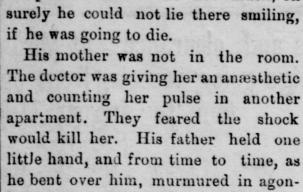

No, he did not, It was more like the meek and lowly Savior of men who once sojourned on earth than any Boston autocrat whose ancestral name he bore, unless indeed it was that Paul Revere of revolutionary fame.

Dear little Chap! We tried to answer all the impossible questions he asked us about the end of the rainbow, and what Heaven was like, and why little children ever died, and how far it was to the sunset, and if angles came down to earth and other things that we were ignorant of. Poor Little Chap, if we laughed at him the blue eyes filled with tears and we could only make our peace by singing him a "new song." One day we were out until nearly night. When we returned we missed our usual greeting from Little Chap, and there was no scrawly letter or other remembrance tied to the door knob. We waited as long as we could, and then with a new song as an excuse, tapped at his mother's door. The nurse opened it; she was crying. "Haven't you heard? Oh, dear, it's too dreadful, and poor little fellow, the doctor says there isn't any hope !"

There had been an accident and Little Chap was hurt! But not much, oh surely he could not lie there smiling, they take their flight ! "Dear Little Chap, do you know us?" "Yes," the words were faint, "sing

Ah, it is true! Blessings brighten as me a new song." A new song! when the tears were bubbling up into our voices, and rainin his face now that look that once seen can never be mistaken.

But she whom he loved best raised her sweet voice and sung in clear tones

Children of the Heavenly King As we journey let us sing." And when she finished it, Little Chap was singing in the choir of God, joining in the new, new song .- Free Press.

WHERE TREY GO TO .- It wasn't three days ago that I put three penholders cuitous route by the stairs to the quick and three blotting pads on this desk, and not one is to be found here now. It was a post office official, and he referred to the desk in the corridor.

What becomes of 'em, do you sup-

Yes; and when it isn't a woman its a | flour business man. Now I am going to stock up the desk again, and you hang around here for a while and see what

Three penholders, each supplied with a new pen, and three fresh pads of blotting paper were laid out, and the watcher seated himself on the window sill. In about five minutes a young man with a a grave, stern man with iron gray hair, brisk air rushed up to the desk, directed a postal card, and knocked one of valley of disappointment all his life. the penholders off on the floor as he Sometimes he let Paul run by his side, rnshed off. The second comer was also a man and he picked up the pen, directed a letter with it, gave a queer glance around him, and pocketed one of the blotters. The third was a woman His mother was young and very who put on her glasses, wrote a postal and coolly pocketed a penholder. Then a boy lounged up and stole another : and between two business men who used the other pen the second blotter was pocketed. This left only one penholder and one blotter. After seven or eight people had used them a woman with widow's weeds on directed a mourning envelope, stamped it, rolled the pen-holder up in the pad and pocketed both, regardless who was watching.
