"Polite "Religion.

To the Editor of the Miramichi Advance. SIR:-A writer in the N. Y. Sun, quoted in the Chatham World of Jan. 6th says, under the heading 'A trial for

It is strange that this question of future retribution should be brought up now, for the doctrine of hell has already been pretty generally abandoned by Protestants. We do not believe that, as understood by the founders of Andover, it is presched in a single congregational church subject is tabooed, by common consent, and the very word 'hell' has come to be regarded as unfit for use in polite religious circles. It is a t-ran which has been even utterly meaningless 'sheol', substituted. If any Congregation I or Presbyterian minister of a fashionable church of Boston, or N. Y., should now thunder forth words of warning against hell-fire, he would be looked upon as a very unpolished term 'sheol' has, in several instances, the Old Testament for hell in the common version, but the revised version has re tained the ter.n hell in at least twetve passages in the Old Testament, see revised version Is. V. 14, Is. XIV 9 and etc. Though "hades" has been substituted for "hell" in certain passages of the New Testament, the term "hell" has been retained i the following passages: Matt. V. 22 and 29 X. 28. XVIII. 9. XXIII. 15. and 33. Mark IX. 47. Luke XII. 5 James III. 6. 2 Pet.

We cannot see on what principle, except an arbitrary one, the Hebrew word vised version. In certain passages, we believe that the "hell" of the common version is the better translation. In P. IX. 17 which is, in the revised version, "the wicked shall return to sheol and &c .. we prefer the reading of the common version and in this we have the support of Dr. Eadie, who, in the Bible Cyclopedia, says on this verse "Will any one suppos that this commination is so pointless as to contain no more than an assertion that the wicked shall die! The awful state ment threatens punishment to the wicked and godless, even punishment in the re gion of despair." We believe that the sweeping assertion affecting the congregational and Presbyterian ministers of the churches specified. isa gross libel, but if it were correct, so much the worse for these ministers a d their congregations, who, to use the words of the English poet, deem "hell a word untit for ears polite"-According to the revised version, the Saviour warned those whom he addressed against "the hell of fire" (see Matt V. 22.) These ministers, as the writer in the Sun asserts, are ashamed o His words, which is very much the same as being ashamed of Himself. There is no wish, on my part, to enter of future punishment; we would only remark, in conclusion, that the proof of the scripture doctrine of future retribution is Bible doctrine is, in various forms. Take,

There is too much indirect taxation in this country. We are paying too much unconsciously through our mouths and on our backs. Our boodlers find the money for their extravagance by the ways and means of our stomachs and vanity, and we go on paying and they go on spending without the people individually auditing on the present occasion, what each really pays. To tax a people through their natural appetites and inclinations has been found by politicians to be the more insidious way to obtain money. The nearer we get to direct taxation the more careful will we be to examine into expenditure. A country that enjoys absolute freedom of trade and direct taxation for necessary expenses has reached the ideal of liberty, and proper financial basis. The cost of management and hability to fraud are also reduced to a minimum. But politicians do not want this. They prefer the delusive method of thriffs and indirect taxation, with all its officialism, patronage, traud and expendi ure which the people bear unequally and without being able to estimate or compare. All unjust laws or methods in life or government are involved in difficulties of explanation, which enables them to exist without too much challenge.
