'Pack up your things as soon as you please, my dear. We're going to move on Saturday,' said Mr. Chesney.' Mr. and Mrs. Chesney were a matrimonial firm—there was no question about that—but Mrs. Chesney had always been a silent partner in the same.' 'If ever I get married,' said Elma, a

'Where to, my dear?' asked Mrs.

Chesney with a little start. 'Into the country,' said the family autocrat. 'I am tired of this city business. It costs a great deal more than it comes to. I'm told you can live at half the expense in the country.' But what is to become of the chilwere to accrue from the move. "It's unfortunate, said he, 'that Elma and Rosie aren't boys. Such a lot of earn money elevated them immensely women folk are enough to swamp any family. article came into the house or came out of it without his cognizance. New dresses were frowned upon; spring bonnets were strictly interdicted; orders were issued that the old carpets should be reserved and broken dishes repaired with a montant and spicklims. with cement and quicklime. 'Save, save' save! That is the chief thing, he kept repreating briskly. 'Women folks can't earn; they should try their best to save.'

'It's all very well for papa,' growled Will. 'He goes to the city every day and sees something besides the pigs and the dead apple trees. He orders a new suit when he needs it. Look at mamma's patched gown and Rosie's dyed bonnet string! Why, they can't even go to church, they are such objects. He gets his lunch at a resturant, and we eat cold beans, and drink dandelion coffee and sage tea!'

'Boys,' fluttered Rosie, 'I've an idea. Mary Penn, who lives on the next farm you know, came to see Elma and me yesterday. Papa is earning his living: Jewelery, we'll earn something too.'

'I should like to know how,' mutter-ed Spencer. 'I might hire out some-where as farm hand, if it wasn't for that wretched old horse, and the pigs, and the wood-chopping and—'

The weeks grew into months, and the red leaves eddied down in little swirls from the maple trees, and 'pigkilling' time came, and, with the aid of a lame, one-eyed man, Mr Chesney laid down his own stock of pork and sausage for the winter with the sense

Nevertheless, Rosie and Elma and their mether shed many a salt tear into the trunks and packing boxes, on top of the woollen blankets, rags and piles of domestic linen.

'I hate the country!' said Elma. 'I'd as soon go to prison and done with it.

'O, Ellie, don't talk so,' said Rose. 'There are wild roses and robins there, just as' one see on the painted placques in the store windows. And perhaps we can have a flower bed, and some dear little downy chickens.

But the first sight of Mulleinstalk Farm was dispiriting in the extreme. Between rock and swamp there was scarcely pasture for the two lean cows that Mr. Chesney had bought at 'a bargain,' and the hollow-backed horse, which stalked about the premises like some phantom Bucephalus.

The apple-trees in the orchard were three-quarters dead, and lean sorrowfully away the last winds, until their boughs touched the very ground; the fences were all gone to ruin, and the front gate was tied up with a hemp string.
