SAVED BY A KISS.

ELMA GRIFFIN AWAKENED IN HER COFFIN.

AND SHE BLUSHED AND SMILED WHEN THE CARESS WAS GIVEN.

(From the San Francisco Examiner.)

'Elma Griffin, died April 15, 1849, aged 19 years, 4 months and 6 days.'

The words were engraved upon a silver plate, but there was no coffin under them. Mrs. Purroy, an elderly lady, visiting friends living on Clinton avenue, Alameda, but whose home is in Brooklyn, N. Y., looked with an air of mingled pride and reverence upon the carving, for her name was once Elma Griffin, and the coffin that was made to hold her remains.

'On my nineteenth birthday,' she said, 'my mother invited a party of acquaintances to our house to celebrate the day. We lived some distance outside of Williamsburg, as it was then, and the ground was a little soft and boggy. One of my friends remembered this as she was about to start for her home with her brother, and she laughingly congratulated me on being housed already and having no occasion to brave the swamp. I was a wild young girl in those days, and I declared at once that I would go with them and return alone. Everybody present tried to dissuade me except the girl's brother. We started, and when we reached my friend's house I was conscious that my feet were quite wet, and that a disagreeable chill had crept over me, but I declined an invitation to go in, and went away at once. Of course, Rob—the brother, I mean—came with me, and somehow I forgot the cold and damp as I walked home.

'I think we must have talked for a long time as we stood on my uncle's doorstep, for suddenly Rob—my escort I mean—said: 'Elma, your face is very pale. Have I kept you standing here too long?' He talked to me for ten minutes after that, and wished me good night and left me. I rang the bell, and when my mother opened the door I told her what I might have known an hour sooner, if I had given it a thought, that I was really ill. She hurried me to bed immediately, and when she came to call me the following morning she looked very anxious. By noon I was delirious, but I could hear the doctor tell my mother I had typhoid fever, and that he did not hold out much hope for my recovery. I knew that my mother was weeping, but I was always a selfish girl, and I could only cry out: 'Robert! Robert! Where is Robert?' and they told me hardly thinking that I heard them, that Robert had been suddenly called upon to start for California early that morning, and had not even heard of my illness. He sent a letter to me, however, but I did not see it until many weeks later.

'I grew rapidly worse, and gradually the knowledge of all outward things passed from me. I fancy I had a certain consciousness, but not of matters around me. I was in another state of being, in which the person acting and speaking—always strangely speaking—was myself, and yet not myself. Then came an utter blank, from which I awoke, after nearly three weeks of oblivion, to see my mother and the doctor standing by my bedside. The doctor said the crisis was past, and I should probably recover, but I did not feel any interest in what he was talking about.

"The quiet days of convalescence followed, and the doctor, seeing that I was very weak, regarded me seriously, and warned my mother that a relapse should be guarded against. I used at that time, to, fall into curious physical conditions that I suppose were trances, in which I knew all that was going on round me, but from which I did not care to arouse myself by moving or speaking. These periods lasted longer and longer, but they were not observed, and as they were rather pleasant than otherwise I said nothing about them.

'Onemornin g I awoke from what seemed to be a natural sleep, and lay with my eyes closed listening to sounds that I could not at first interpret; bnt slowly the knowledge came to me that my mother was sobbing beside my bed. I tried to ask her why she was grieving, but I could not move or speak. The trance was upon me. I was sensitive, however, and knew that I was lying upon a hard substance and not upon the comfortable mattress of my bed. I could feel, too, very little covering over me, and despite my eyelids being down the gloomy darkness of the room could be detected. Where in the world have they carried me to?' I thought.

'Presently I heard my mother's voice, and I knew that she was speaking to my cousin Mary, who was staying in the house with us.

'Poor Elma,' she said. I was so sure that God would spare her to me. She struggled through that dreadful illness only to die quietly in her sleep at last. It is very hard, Mary.'

'I have often wondered since that I did not really die of horror at that moment, as I realized like a lightning flash that they thought I was dead and had put me into my coffin. They were going to bury me! I strove hard to speak; but the sphinx was not more dumb than I. I tried to stir, but the rock of Gibraltar might have moved as easily. 'Must my life be smothered out in a grave for want of a little speech or action now? I thought.

'It is hard, indeed, dear aunt,' replied Mary, 'but His will be done. You must arouse yourself. The undertaker will close the coffin in a few minutes. Do you think Robert—Mr. Purroy—will be here?'

'I hardly think so now,' answered my mother wearily. Something must have happened to delay him. He was to have arrived at home yesterday, but he did not come, and I postponed the burial until to-day. He had not heard of her death. Poor fellow! The news will nearly kill him. There is one person in the world, I think, who loved poor Elma as dearly as I did.'

'Oh, Robert, Robert, I cried, with a silent voice, 'come quickly. If you look at me you will know I am not dead.'

'I heard a knock at the bedroom door. Was it Robert? No, it was only the undertaker.

'May I close it now, ladies?' he asked, in professionally mournful but very business-like tones.

'Nobody but myself knew that my heart was beating, and even I hardly knew it as the undertaker spoke. A second afterward it seemed to me that it throbbed loudly enough for everyone to hear it, for somebody rung the door bell, and I knew as well that it was Robert as though my sealed eyes could have looked through brick and wood and mortar to see him standing outside. Softly and quietly he entered the room; gravely and calmly he asked my mother and my cousin to leave him for a few minutes alone with his dead. He closed the door after they had gone out, and stooping over the coffin, gently kissed me. Then he started. I heard the quick, nervous movement, and I knew that I was saved.

'He hastily called my mother, and the doctor was hastily summoned. He saw at once that life was not extinct, though he had been just as positive four days earlier that I was quite dead.

'My husband declares that an old woman may say it now—that I blushed and smiled when he kissed me. At all events I lived to marry him, and he would not part with that silver coffin-plate for ten times its weight in gold.'

TRUST HIM NOT.—A writer in the Western Rural insists that all bulls are vicious by nature, and that only fear makes them safe. It is not necessary to treat them harshly in order to inspire them with a wholesome dread of the owner or herdsman. But it is necessary to keep them under constant discipline.

The Rural New Yorker well says:

The folly and crime of treating bulls, and notably pure-bred bulls, with a tenderness which is measured by the dollars involved in their price, is plainly shown by the murderous and too often fatal attacks they make on their keepers and others. If the parsimonious owner was the only victim it would be a small matter but he is not. Others are frequently killed by the animal, simply because he would not administer the timely and proper chastisement for fear of hurting a dollar or two held in his hide.

We earnestly advocate the treatment of all animals with kindness. But any one who supposes that this treatment will make it safe to trust a bull falls into a great mistake. We mean just what we say: TRUST HIM NOT. Never give him his opportunity. Run no risks. Always have him so fixed that you can check him and control him in a moment. Even the innocent-looking Jerseys, with their cowy heads and faces, are not to be trusted for a moment.

The Miles City (Montana) Stock Growers' Journal says:—

You never heard of anyone being shot accidently with agun that was known to be loaded, because people are always careful of such. They don't monkey with them. It is only the old rusty thing that everyone knows is not loaded that is sure to go off and kill you deader than a mackerel. So it is with the gentle, nice sort of bull that is sure to run his horns through you when you are not thinking of it. The mean, devilish bull hurts no one, for no one takes any risk with him. Don't take any risk with any of them, and you will be sure not to be hurt. Watch even the gentlest and keep on watching him, and then a voice will not come back from your grave, "I didn't know it was dangerous." A gentle bull is like an old rusty gun, "always loaded."

LICE ON A COLT.—A colt that is troubled with lice should be thoroughly brushed twice a day, and the brush should be smeared with carbolated cosmoline. This preparation of petroleum is inoffensive to the colt, but deadly to the vermin, and will soon relieve the animal from its tormentors. The cosmoline should be well brushed into the coat and reach the skin.

ASHES should never be thrown on manure-heaps nor mixed with any kind of manure. As the caustic potash liberates the ammonia, which is very difficult to save, therefore, spread ashes immediately on the land whether grass or cultivated.
