Fair Play. Geatlemen!

It happens, too often, that party politics are carried to, and even over the brink of the riduculous, with the effect upon the disinterested and logical of creating the impression that party differences are based on non-essentials. Everybody acquainted with the ADVANCE knows which side of Dominion politics it is on and we can therefore afford to say that we think that side is not strengthened by a kind of inferential faultfinding illustrated by an esteemed Liberal paper the other day in connection with a press despatch. The heading was-"C. P. R. contractors asking favors' -the despatch in question being as follows:--"J. E. Askwith, of Starrs, Askwith & Co., contractors on the Short Line Railway through Maine, interviewed the commissioner of customs vesterday and asked that his firm be allowed to return free of duty a number of horses to Canada which had been employed on their contract in Maine. The commissioner said that the horses would be so brought in, provided proof were furnished that they had originally been exported from Canada.'

The request made by the contractor seems to us a very fair and reasonable one, and the condition under which the commissioner proposes to grant it is of the same character. The horses in question are not dutible under any reasonable interpretation of the customs laws, and their owners are, therefore, not asking for any favor, but presenting a claim for what is their right. If we find fault where none exists it will have the effect illustrated in the fable the shepherd who raised the false cry of wolf! wolf! and found that when the wolf really appeared, and again raised the alarm, those whom he had already needlessly not heed him.

Incorporation.

The incorporation idea seems to meet with general approval in town, if we may judge from the expressions of opinion we have heard of late on the subject. Our people feel that they are behind those of other large centres of population in the matter, and that while they remain in their present unorganised condition, they are not doing justice to the place and themselves. Our local affairs are controlled by the Municipal Council of the County, the functions of which are inadequate to deal with such matters, and it must also be remembered that we have but two out of the twenty-six councillors com posing that body. It is true that the councillors of the respective parishes are allowed to arrange most of the business of their localities as they may agree, but why should Chatham, which represents nearly a third of the property and a fourth of the population of the County have to refer her purely local affairs to a body in which she has no adequate representation, that is not acquainted with such matters and is not expected to be. Incorporation would not only give the right to the ratepayers to elect a board of sufficient numbers to fairly represent all localities and interests of the Town, but it would give Chatham two additiona members in the Municipal Council where, according to the proportion she has to bear of the County's expenses, she is entitled to eight representatives. At the present time the Town is losing revenues to which it is entitled and the County at large is profiting by its negligence in the matter, its municipal representatives being powerless to correct the aluses. What justice or reason is there, for instance, in Chatham taxpayers being required to pay regular or special police to keep order when a circus is in town, while the tax-collector is obliged to send the tax the circus pays to the County Treasurer, to be used in paying the bills of all the parishes? Or why should the fees paid by auctioneers in the Town of Chatham go into the County fund as they now But, apart from such manifest wrongs as these, the people realise that our town services are too important and the interests involved too large to be permitted much longer to be managed | July. under the existing loose and insufficient system. The Municipalities Act gives the County Council power to appoint the town officers, and also to ordain bylaws for the regulation of certain of its affairs, and the provincial Acts of As sembly also contain provisions of the same class, some of which are special and others of general application, so that the machinery by which Chatham's local affairs are controlled is so complicated and clumsy as to suggest the idea of a Chinese puzzle, designed to confuse the ordinary citizen and make it a matter of laborious study for him to know how the locality in which he lives is governed. We hope the people of the town, generally, will give their attention to this important subject. It should be approached by all without prejudice and with a desire to secure the desired improvement if possible at an early day. The incorporation of towns in Nova Scotia is being effected very satisfactorily under the Town's Incorporation Act, which was passed by the legislature of that province last session and we cannot help thinking that the Government of this province might situation by applying at the ADVANCE Office. give us a similar measure, which would be the complement of the ex isting Municipalties Act. So far as Chatham is concerned, it cannot afford to wait much longer and we believe that Warren C. Winslow, if a ratepayers' meeting were called to consider the matter a large majority would be found in favor of the change

How to keep a lumber camp free fro oxious insects, says the Timberman, matter of vital importance to the we fare of the men and their value in th hard labor required from them, If the men's rest is broken in upon, their worl is rendered just so much the poorer, s therefore a question of dollars and cents to the owner of a camp, that it be kept free from fleas, bugs and lice. When these pests take possession of a bunk camp, it is almost impossible to get rid of them, and a word or two relative to the building of the sleeping arrangements f the men will not be out of place. It w pay to provide cedar boards with which to build the bunks. No vermir can stand cedar. In the bottom of each bunk cedar boughs should be spread and oil of cedar plentifully sprinkled upon the bed clothes. This is far superior to all insect powder, and if occasionally renewed and applied will keep the bunk camp clean. Remember, that the sounder the rest obtained by the men the better they can abor, and these little non essentials when attended to, will keep your man in a fit condition to give you a full return for the wages you pay them. Tho President Elect.

BRIEF SKETCH OF THE CAREER OF BEN-JAMIN HARRISON. Benjamin Harrison, the twenty-third President-elect of the United States and grandson of the ninth President, was born Aug. 10, 1833, at North Bend, O. father was John Scott Harrison, and the family had their homestead not far from Cincinnatti from the time that Grandfather Harrison went to Ohio as one of the State's first settlers. President-elect Harrison graduated from Miami University when he was 18. His teachers say that he was quick, bright and able to go ahead. He proved that he was progressive by getting married pretty soon and became a father before he was 21 years old. After leaving college he studied law with Judge Bellany Stover, in Cincinnatti, and was admitted before he was old enough to vote. There was not much money in his pocket, for his father gave him just $200 for capital. With this and his wife he started for Indianapolis to begin practising his profession.

It was in 1855 that he put out his shingle in Indianapolis. He lived with his family in three rooms in a still standing house on Vermont street. For a long he just about made meet. He was poor and ambitious, and he considered his wife the half of his capital. The other half was his capability for intense application.

Gov. Joseph Wright gave him a start by engaging him in a legislative investigation that gave him a chance to show his mettle. A murder case in which he was assistant prosecutor also enabled him to make reputation. He did well in each before. Law and politics were tied tight together in those days in Indiana, and the further young Harrison was led into law the further he got into politics. Those were the days of the conception of the Republican party. Harrison was in it at the birth. He knew how to talk on the stump, and he made speeches for the new party, first for Freemont and then for Lincoln. In the campaign of 1860 Thomas A Hendricks was stumping for falling at every step. Get that boat in the Demogratic nominee, and his friends challenged Harrison to a debate with the late Vice-President. Harrison accepted, and Hendricks friends exclaimed: "What a headlong fool the young man must be!" But the story goes according to Harrison's friends, that Hendricks was worsted in the battle of logic and appeal, and that the chairman of the meeting remarked: "I never heard a man skin an opponent as quickly as Ben Harrison did lendricks that day.' The first office that the young lawyer ever obtained was that of Supreme Court reporter. He needed it, for his poverty continued, nowithstanding his practice kept growing. When the war came Gov. Morton asked him to recruit a regiment He took the assignment, got up a com-pany, and, after being a Second Lieutenant and then Captain, he was made Colonel of the 17th Indiana. After garrison duty in Kentucky and Tennessee he went into the thick of the fight, and at the Green seized him as he rose to the surface. battle of Rosaca, May 15, 1864, he led the assault, rushed at the head of his rigiment over to the enemy's lines and captured both men and guns.

While he was with his regiment the egislature had deglared the position of Supreme Court reporter vacant. Harrison was determined to hold the place and got a thirty days leave of absence to go ome and stump the place for himself He was elected, and served till 1868. Then he gave himself up to the law alto gether for eight years. His cases were important, but he did not get big fees. and so he still remained quite poor. But he seemed anxious to make money for he kept from politics until 1876, when Godlove Orth, the nominee for Governor. having declined the honor, Harrison was the Tilden and Hendricks year, and he was beaten. In 1880 he was rewarded for his party services by being elected

He is not an orator in the largest sense, but he is a very forcible speaker. His voice is somewhat shrill, but not unpleasant, and his enunication is so clear that he is easily understood. In stature he is under the average size. A big head, short neck, broad shoulders, rather robust chest, and short legs make him a noticeable man. His temperament is either cold, or he has great diffidence, for there is nothing of magnetism in his personality. He has a house of his own, and his wife participates largely in the affairs of society. His daughter is married. Brodie's Big Jump.

HE LEAPS DOWN 212 FFET FROM THE CAN TILEVER BRIDGE AT POUGHKEEPSIE. [N. Y. Herald, 10th.]

Hungry for more notoriety, and stimu lated by a bet of $500 with Al. Davis and a gold medal promised him by Richard K. Fox, Steve Brodie jumped yesterday morning from the west pier of the cantilever bridge at Poughkeepsie, a distance of 212 feet to the water below. He escaped with slight injuries.

The jump has been talked of ever since last June, when Brodie won several hundred dollars from Davis by breaking Boynton's record in swimming from Albany to this city. The bridge is fifty-six feet higher than the Brooklyn Bridge, and w thought that Brodie could make ump and live. Al. Davis has frequently said that Brodie might be a good swimmer in a rubber suit, but he did not believe that Steve was much of a jumper. This sort of nagging went on for some time until finally Brodie became angry and said he was not afraid to jump from any bridge in America. He had won a wager with Davis by his swim down the Hudson and beating Boynton's time, and won a wif into the bargain. DEPOSITING THE STAKES.

Becoming wearied by Davis' taupts Brodie finally offered a bet that he would leap from the Poughkeepsie Bridge, which Davis promptly accepted, hoping to win his money lost on the swim. The two men then proceeded to Mr. Fox's office and deposited $1,000, W. E. Harding being made the stakeholder. Mr. Fox remarked that Brodie was very foolish make the attempt, but if he really did make it successfully he promised the little dare-devil a gold medal.

PREPARING FOR THE JUMP. Accompanied by W. E Harding, Ed Iyer, Pat Green, Charles W. Moore, and John Hough, Brodie went up on the West Shore read on Thursday night to Highland. Before daybreak yesterday morning the party were at the bridge. Harding watched the proceedings from the shore, while Green and Hyer were pulled out into the stream by a couple of

It was raining very heavily and there was a dense fog enveloping the skeleton looking iron structure which spans the Hudson. Brodie ascended the mountain with some difficulty, for he wore high shoes which laced nearly to the knee and were each soled with a pound and a quarter of lead. His clothing was heavily padde I. Fightly tied about his breast were five inflated rubber bags.

Persevering Brodie finally reached the west approach to the bridge and endeavor ed to clamber along the half finished road way. There were only a few scattered railroad ties and some stringpieces, so there was scarcely any footing, and it seemed as though the jumper must walk out on the mist. His movements were unnutic ed by the watchmen, for they were not guarding the bridge itself. After spending half an hour in feeling his way to the bridge, Brodie finally became discouraged and descended the mountain.

When he reached Harding, who was shivering at the water's edge, Brodie announced that unless there was some other way of reaching the centre of the bridge he must give up the job and lose his "Are you afraid to jump after all this fuss?" asked Harding. "No, I am not afraid to jump," replied Brodie, "but up there I was afraid of and I will try again,'

GOING UP THE LADDER. The men in the boat responded to the cautious summons uttered by Harding. and Brodie clambered in, ordering the boatmen to pull out to the centre pier. Here they found a long iron ladder that had been put in position for the use of the bridge builders. Brodie scrambled out of the boat and went up the treacherous rungs hand over hand. The four men sitting in the boat saw him disapper in the gloom and then waited for a few minutes. wondering if Steve would really make the desperate and foolhardy leap.

Suddenly there was a heavy splash near them and they knew it must be Brodie. Rowing swifting to the spot, HOW THE JUMP WAS MADE.
