'You won't give us nothin' for the subscription? said Mrs. Biggard, folding her mittened hands sanctimoniously upon her lap. 'Remember, Mary Hay, 'he who giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord.' 'Yes, I know, Mrs. Biggard,' said Mary Hay, with the color coming and going on her cheek, while a sense of the ridiculous strove within her against the meek consciousness of the solemnity of the words just quoted; "but the farm hasn't done as well this year as we expected it to do, and until all the outstanding debts are paid I think it would be scarcely just to indulge myself in the luxury of subscribing to the 'Fund for Evangelizing the Eboe Indians.'

Mrs. Biggard clasped the little red morocco subscription book with a clicking sound.

'Humph!' said she, 'why don't you say at once that you had rather spend your money in navy-blue silk gowns and flashy bonnets? Mary reddened to the roots of her

'Perhaps you are not aware, Mrs. Briggard," said she, 'that the navyblue dress was mother's old one dyed over at home, and that the bonnet was a present from my aunt in Springfield. . 'All very well to talk,' sputtered Mrs. Biggard, shaking out her multitudinous flounces. 'But I know that Mr. Mildmay will be powerfully disappointed. He wants something besides empty talk from the ladies of his flock. Once more the roseate color suffused

Mary's cheeks. 'My duty is my duty,' she said, 'and I cannot swerve from it to please any one, not even Mr. Mildmay.'

And the amiable Mrs. Briggard went straight to the rectory and told Mr. Mildmay 'that Mary Hay said she warn't agoin' to subscribe to the fund to please Mr. Mildmay or anyone else.'

The rector listened in silence, but he was conscious ot a pang of inward annovance.

He had scarcely expected so curt a message from Mary Hay, in whose dove-like blue eyes he had so often read the light of sympathy, whose downcast head reminded him of the beautiful 'Mater Dolorosa.'

'So different from my Ruey, now ain't she?' said Mrs. Biggard. 'Why, Ruey, she's fairly walked through the soles of a pair o' boots a solicitin' subscriptions for the fund. There never was nobody so devout as she is. And she wants to know-my Ruey doeswhether she and Almiry shan't come over to the rectory an' put up the parlor curtains for you this afternoon?

'Thank you!' said Mr. Mildmay, with something of an embarassed air; 'but] daresay that Bridget will do very well, I wouldn,t trouble Miss Zeruiah, and-'Oh, it won't be no trouble at all,' said Mrs. Biggard. And off she went to give the needed directions to Zeruiah and Almira, he two lean, middle-aged daughters.

'I do feel such a motherly sympathy for a bacheldore clergyman!' said she 'There sin't no more helpless creatur on the face of the earth.'

Mary Hay, busy at her work in th farmhouse kitchen, was puzzling he brain to think of some possible or im possible plan to get a little money to help kind Mr. Mildmay's plan along. 'I wish I could spare something she said, 'if it was only a dollar.' 'I wish you could, my dear!' said gentle Mrs. Hay, who had overheard the eager words.

'Mother,' cried Mary, 'there are the quinces-down by the railroad! Why couldn't I sell them at the store? The trees hang full this year, and the fruit is beautifully perfect?'

'I never thought of that,' said Mrs. Hay. 'We will go to-morrow and gather them, Mary-you and I." Mary went singing about her work that afternoon. Her heart was light as any feather. Why, why had she not remembered the quince tree before? Quinces were rare and high-priced this season, and she thought she was cer tain of at least $5 for the crop.

But the next day, when she and he mother-Mrs. Hay carrying the basket and Mary merrily crundling the barrow along before her-went down to the orchard, whose slopes extended to the glittering steel rails of the railway, lo, and behold! the trees were utterly atripped of their golden load.

Mary burst into tears. She down on the edge of the wheelbarrow and hid her head in her mother's lap like a child

'Oh, mother, who has done this?' sh cried. 'Who can have been so wicked -so cruel ?

'It's the boys, I'm afraid,' said Mrs. Hay. 'Don't fret, daught er-don't !

It's done, and it can't be helped.' 'The boys never served us so before.' said Mary between her sobs. 'Yes.

mother, you are right. It can't be helped. Let us go home. There is an end of the subscription money now.' Slowly and sadly the two women toiled back up the hill with the wheelbarrow and the basket. Mr. May just her story with amazement. 'It's the first time that ever a tree of mine was robbed,' said he. 'I didn't know as we had such boys in this neighborhood, but, look here, Polly, don't cry,' laying his broad, brown hand soothingly on his daughter's shoulder. 'It's always darkest just before daylight. Here's a $5 gold piece that Mrs Blake paid me for the hay in the up medder. I was going to take it to-

'Squinches, eh,' said Luke Larrabee, who had come in with a stone pitcher for a gallon of Mrs. Hay's cider vinegar. 'Squinches is mighty scuss this season I see Mrs. Biggard's folks doin' up a sight on 'em when I was over there this morning. Mrs. Biggard, she's dreadful churchy, you know, and the parson he'd said he was partial to preserved squinches; and there was preserved squinches; and there was the partial to preserved squinches and there was sequent thereon, 300 pages 8 vo. 125 prescriptions for all

'And so I did, for our cow she got outen the field and wandered quite a ways down the railroad, and I was ahuntin' for her by moonlight, when seen them from behind them 'ere sassafras bushes down by the track. Wal, you should have seen her turn redder than the big bell-peppers out in the garden patch.'

'What an if I did?' says she. 'Mary Hay she give 'em to me. 'Oh,' says I, 'that's a horse of an-ye didn't give 'em to her, hey?' Mary and her mother looked blankly at each other. The good father chuck-

'Them quinces was worth $5 at the very least,' he said. 'I guess, Polly, if I was you, I'd collect the money.' The ladies of the Fund Committee were at Mrs. Briggard's house that afternoon. A good many faithful and devout sisters were present, and some of the brotherhood as well. Mr. Mildmay sauntered in toward teatime and was thanking Zeruiah and Almira Biggard for the beautiful jars of preserved quinces which had found their way to the rectory, when Mrs. Biggard's shrill voice sounded above the hum of general discourse. 'Now that the minister is here there ain't no reason that we shohldn't render in our accounts,' she crackled. And I'm happy to say that every lady in the parish has given something to

Mrs. Biggard uttered somethingnobody knew exactly what it was, but the changes of her complexion would have reminded one of the proverbial 'dying dolphin,' as she drew out her purse and deposed a crumpled five-dollar bill in Miss Hay's quietly extended

'I-I confess I've been neglectful, said she. 'I suppose I ought to have attended to it before.'

'I think you ought, indeed,' was Miss Hay's calm reply. 'I didn't know as you cared nothin' compliment of asking us,' said Mary And she put the five-dollar bill the little blue-ribboned "collection basket" which was in Miss Zeruriah Biggard's especial care.

Mr. Mildmay walked home with her that evening. She did not tell him the story of the quinces, to her credit be it spoken. Mary Hay was not one to strike a fallen enemy. And perhaps she and Mr. Mildmay had pleasanter topics of conversation than any of the numerous faults and failings of Mrs.

But honest Luke Larrabee was by no means so reticent. He related the little incident of the moonlight raid on the quince orchard, far and wide. And them Biggards is always
