It turns out that against the buyer."

Two Orators and Their Themes.

(St. John "Globe.")

The theme of Mr. McInerney's address

at St. Joseph's College was Canadian independence. The orator had much to say about many things, and he said it well but, the real meaning of it all was that ardent and generous Canadian youth, the youth of two grest races, possibly the youth of one greater race when these two are united, must aspire to found here a nationality even greater than that of the young republic to the south of us. enthusiasm and hopefulness thus display ed is good and cannot fail to have an inspiriting effect upon young men. No doubt there is a large body of men in Canada looking towards the creation of Canadian nationality. It it easy to see that the thought was in the mind of the Archbishop of Halifax when, the other night, he spoke about Imperial Federation. He favored the Imperial Federation scheme, but in his mind he seemed to have the idea of Canada uniting as a nation with other English nations in the Federation, and he confessed to a feeling of something akin to humiliation at the thought of governors coming to us across the Atlantic; not because he objected to the men, but because he felt that the Canadian people would be a greater people if they made their governors for themselves. It is well to have these matters discussed. Widely different as views may be every reference to the great question of Canadian independence hastens the time when the commencement will be made looking towards the making practical of the theory. On such a question there must be, very naturally, great differences of opinion. But when the crisis comes differences will be harmonized. or overcome, or yielded up, just as they were when the people of the older colonies on this continent were face to face with the serious task of framing a nation al constitution. Mr. McInerney must, despite his aspirations, feel how far they are, seemingly, from any practical realization. He desires to see founded here greater nation than that of the United States. But will he live to see it? We are not row entrusted with the power o selecting by a popular vote our Provincial Governors. We have not in ourselves the power to frame our local constitution. We have not universal suffrage. We have no recognition of the idea of th equality of all men. The man who de clines to be knighted excites surprise and question is even raised as to his loyalty As for our chief ruler we do not select bim, either by popular vote or ministerial management. That vote continues to be done for us in Downing street. portion of our principal legislature selected for life, and is without any of the responsibilities to the people which are necessary for sound government. From any control in the affairs of this continent-except our own local affairswe are excluded. Treaties are made without much regard to our wishes, and even our territory can be disposed of without our consent. We have then much to do to catch up to the great nation alongside of us. Still it is an inspiring and a noble thought that we have the capacity to pass that nation by with bound -when are we to begin to bound? Mr. Justice King-before the Provincial University-dealt more particularly with the advantages of a collegiate education in the development of individual character and mind, and he specially maintained the excellence of the arts course in fitting a young man for the battle of life, or for the fulfilment of life's duties even though they may invoke no battle. Under the above heading, in the Moncton Times, is a communication from Mr. C. E. Knapp, of Dorchester. Mr. Knapp, though somewhat eccentric in other ways, has long been a staunch temperance man and took an active part in the campaign which resulted in the strong vote against the repeal of the Scott act though great zeal was displayed in the effort to retain the act but comparatively little effort is being made to carry it into full effect. This is most regrettable Mr. Knapp, as a friend of the Scott Act, may be supposed not to have overdrawn the picture, and here is a brief extract from his letter:-The result of the election indicated that there was a moral force in the county that could not be resisted; that the temperance party was not working femere temporary victory, and that as the legal impediments that surrounded the enforceance party was not working for ment of the Scott Act had been swept away the suppression of the liquor traffic would be accomplished. The army of Scott act men marshalled under the banner in February last seems to have been disbanded, while the forces of the conquered enemy maintain their ground strengthened by defeat. Here in Dorchester the number of places where rum is sold have been reduced, and the traffic has been to a large extent concentrated at the Corner, but if we may judge from the number of drinking men we see on the streets, and from the drunkenness that is brought to our notice, more liquor is now sold at the Corner than was formerly sold in the whole parish. Never was this more apparent than during the last term of the county court, during which Dorchester had a carnival of drunkenness, and was a pandemonium with rnm ram-

Simson & Mason vs. the New Bruns wick Trading Company.

In the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice on Tuesday, before Mr. Baron Huddleston and Mr. Justice Charles, the case of Simson & Mason vs. the New Brunswick Trading Company came on for hearing. Mr. Pike said this was an appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs against an order of Mr. Justice Cave, at Chambers, setting aside an order of the Master refusing defendants leave to issue a commission for taking the evidence of two witnesses on their behalf. The learned counsel said the action was brought for fraudulent misrepresentation against the defendant company by the plaintiffs, who were also a company, and it was an action to recover £15,000, which was paid by the plaintiff company to the defendant company, upon, it was alleged, a number of false representations, which were set out in the statement of claim. implements of knowledge.
