Dorothy flounces up in a moment.

'I will trouble you not to insult my friends,' she cries with flaming cheeks.

'And it is not very easy to believe your sincerity when he was sitting in your pocket all last night, and you were out walking with him for two hours this marning.'

'In any case' replies Mrs. Dalton coolly, 'your remarks prove that I have had time and opportunity to form an opinion of his qualities. I don't deny that he is good looking, but it is intolerable that he should be so conscious of it. I admit that he is not without a certain amount of cleverness, and has been well educated, but I violently object to his thinking himself able to sit in judgement on people a good deal older and cleverer than himself.

'On you, for instance!' cries Dolly.

'No, I was not thinking of myself, though I admit the soft impeachment (the one regarding my age, at least); and what I dislike most of all is his placing himself on a pedestal to be looked at and longed for by—by pretty, silly little girls, who ought to know

Dolly stiffens her back, and says, with an assumption of dignity which sits indifferently well upon her. "If you will excuse me I should not prefer discussing Mr. Lascelles with you. You are perfectly welcome to your opinion of him, and I claim the liberty of retaining mine." 'I shall never be able to do it,' groans Dolly.

'Not with such a big stake to win?' Dolly stiffens her back, and says,

'That I may win and wear him myself?' suggests Mrs. Dalton, quite good humoredly. 'No, my dear and acute child, believe me, you have not fathomed and unmasked my baseness this sime. Still, she does, poor little girl, regard Mr. Clement Lascelles as the first prize in the marriage lottery, and is willing to take upon herself her part of the contract; to worship him with her body, and endow him with all her worldly goods. For in a small way she is an heiress, though he is not destitute of money and has an excellent position. There is a desperate fight between Mrs. Dalton and Dolly before the latter can be persuaded to copy and forward what she considers a heartless and flippant missive. In the end Marian triumphs. Mr. Lascelles does not appear at breakfast, and Dolly, though her soul quakes within her, laughs and talks to Dick.

Later in the evening, when they are playing lawn-tennis, Clement Lascelles, feeling much smaller than he has ever done in his life, seeks counsel from Mrs Dalton. With an angelic smile she alternately pricks him with daggers and makes him gulp down bowls of poison; but she does him an excellent turn by taking a great deal of the nonsense out of him. He confesses that he adores Dolly. How, O how, is he to win her? Has he a ghost of a chance?

Mrs. Dalton, looking solemn, declares her inability to reply to this. She hints at Dolly's youth and love of amusement. She hints, too, at Dick's unflagging good spirits and temper. And the upshot of it is that when Dick returns, crestfallen, from his afternoon ride shot of it is that when Dick returns, crestfallen, from his afternoon ride with Dolly, having spoken and received his answer, Clement Lascelles carries off the young lady to her boudoir on pretence of wanting to be shown something, and replacing the melancholy of Hamlet by the conquering airs of young Lovelace, takes her in his arms, swears he has been a fool, and has really never loved any one but her sweet self, and that if she accepts him her life shall be one round of pleasure.

Twenty minutes later Dolly has passed on all his embraces, and more, to Marian.

'How clever you are, darling!' she says, admiringly.

To which Mrs. Dalton replies: 'Now you knew how to manage him, make good use of your knowledge.'—From the London World.
