THE FROZEN PIRATE

BY W. CLARK RUSSELL. [Continued.] CHAPTER XIV.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE. After the many great mercies which had been vouchsafed me, such as my being the only one saved of all the crew of the Laughing Mary, my deliverance from the dangers of an open boat, my meeting with this schooner and discovering within her everything needful for the support of life, I should have been guilty of the basest ingratitude had I repined because there was no boat in the ship. Yet for all that I could not but see it was a matter concerned me very closely. Should the vessel be crushed, what was to become of me? It was easy to propose to myself the making of a raft or the like of such a fabric; but everything was so hard frozen that, being single-handed, it was next to impossible I should be able to put together such a contrivance as would be fit to live in the smallest sea-way. However, I was resolved not to make myself melancholy with these consider ations. The good fortune that had attended me so far might accompany me to the end, and maybe I was the fitter just then to take a hopeful view of my condition because of the cheerfulness awakened in me by the noble show of coal in the forepeak. At twelve o'clock by the watch in my pocket I got my dinner. I had a mind for a lighter drink than brandy, and went to the lazarette and cut out a block of the wine in the cask I had opened; I also knocked out the head of a tierce of beef, designing a hearty regale for supper. You smile, perhaps, that I should talk so much of my eating; but if on shore, amid the security of existence there, it is the one great business of life, that to say, the one great business of life after love, what must it be to a poor shipwrecked wretch like me, who had nothing else to think of but his food?

Yet I could not help smiling when I considered how I was carrying my drink about in my fingers. What the wine was I do not know; it looked like clare, but was somewhat sweet, and was the most generous wine I ever tasted, spite of myhaving to drink it warm, for if let the cup out of my hand to cool, lo when I looked it was ice ! Whilst I sat smoking my pipe it entered my head to presently turn those two silent gentlemen in the cabin out of it. I had been in the schooner two days only; I had been heartened by the plenty I had met with, a sound night's rest, the fire, and my escape from the fate that had certainly overtaken me had I gone away in the boat. But being of a superstitious nature and never a lover of solitude, I easily guessed that in a few days the weight of my loneliness would come to press very heavily upon me, and that if I suffered those figures to keep the cabin I should find myself lying under a kind of horror which might end in breaking down my manhood and perhaps in unsettling my

That such fancies should possess me should lose no time to provide against their growth; so I settled my scheme best I could on to the deck; then, there being three, to get them over the side, and afterwards by degrees to transport the four of them to some steep whence they would slide of themselves into the ocean. My pipe being smoked out, I stepped into the cabin, and ascending the ladder threw off the companion-cover and opened the doors, and then went to the man that had his back to the steps, but my courage failed me: he was so life-like, there was so wild and fierce an earnestness in the expression of his face, so inimitable a picture of horror in his starting posture, that my hands fell to my side and I could not lay hold of him. will not stop to analyse my fear or ask why, since I knew that this man was dead, he should have terrified me surely no living man could; I can only repeat that the prospect of touching him, and laying him upon the deck and then dragging him up the ladder, was indescribably fearful to me, and turned away, shaking as if I had the

But it had to be done, nevertheless; and after a great deal of reasoning and self-reproach I seized him on a sudden, and, kicking away the bench, let him fall to the deck. He was frozen as hard as stone and fell like stone, and 1 looked to see him break, as a statute might that falls lumpishly. His arms remaining raised put him into an at titude of entreaty to me to leave him in peace; but I had somewhat mastered myself, and the hurry and tumult of my spirits were a kind of hot temper; so catching him by the collar, I dragged him to the foot of the companion-steps, and then with infinite labor and number of sickening pauses hauled him up the ladder to the deck.

out of breath. He had been a very fine man in life, or beauty too, as was to be seen in the shape of his features and the particular elegance of his chin, despite the distortion of his last unspeakable dismay; and with his clothes | indeed the noise of the burning fire I guessed his weight came hard upon | would have permitted me to distinguish to haul up a ladder.

and to rest myself, and then came back lieve there is anything supernatural to the cabin and looked at the other man. It would not do to stand idly ing in this ship, and am I to suppose. contemplating him, for already there assuming she is haunted, that a ghost, was slowly creeping into me a dread of which I have always read and heard of seeing his face; so I took hold of him as an essence, has in its shadowy being and swayed him from the table, and such quality of muscle as would enable he fell upon the deck sideways, pre- it to turn that heavy man over from his serving his posture, so that his face side on to his back? No, no, thought remained hidden. I dragged him a I! depend upon it, either he is alive little way, but he was so heavy and his and may presently come to himself, or attitude rendered him as a burthen so else in some wonderful way the fire in surprisingly cumbrous that I was sure I thawing him has so wrought in his could never of my own strength haul frozen fibres as to cause him to turn. him up the ladder. Yet neither was it tolerable that he should be there. I ly bent towards the furnace, stretched thought of contriving a tackle called a whip, and making one end fast to him melancholy sigh. Gracious heaven, and taking the other end to the little thought I, he is alive! and with less of capstan on the main deck; but on in- terror than of profound awe, now that CORNMEAL, UATMEAL, BEEF, PORK, specting the capstan I found that the I saw there was nothing of a ghostly or frost had rendered it immovable, add- I approached and bent over him. His ed to which there was nothing whatever eyes were still shut, and I could not to be done with the iron-hard gear, and therefore I had to give that plan up. Then, thought I, if I was to put him before the fire, he might presently thaw into some sort of suppleness, and so prove not harder than the other to get on deck. I liked the idea, and without more ado dragged him laboriously into the cook-room and laid him close to the furnace, throwing in a little pile of coal to make the fire roar. I then went on deck, and easily and whilst this was doing I pulled open his coat and freed his neck, fetching a enough, the deck being slippery, got coat from the cabin to serve as a pillow my first man to where the huge fellow was that had sentinelled the vessel when I first looked down upon her; but when I viewed the slopes, broken into rocks, which I, though unburdened, had found hard enough to ascend, I was perfectly certain I should never be able to transport the bodies to the top of the cliffs, I must either let them fall into the great split astern of the ship, or lower them over the side and leave the hollow in which the schooner lay to be their

I paced about, not greatly noticing the cold in the little valley, and relishing the brisk exercise, scheming to convey the bodies to the sea, for I was passionately in earnest in wishing the four of them away; but to no purpose. It was still blowing a fresh bright gale from the south; the sea, as might be known by the noise of it, beat very heavily against the cliffs of ice; and the extremity of the hollow, where it opened to the ocean but without showing it, was again and again veiled by a vast cloud of spray, the rain of which I could hear ringing like volleys of shot as the wind smote it and drove it with incredible force against the rocks past the him in such a manner before it that the brow of the north slope. I thought to heat was reflected all over the front of myself there should be power in this wind to quicken the sliding of even so remitting this work only to rest, and mighty a berg as this island north- finding that the brandy had stolen wards. Every day should steal it by down his throat, I poured another dram something, however inconsiderable, nearer to warmer regions, and no gale, nay, no gentle swell even, but must help to crack and loosen it into pieces. "Oh," cried I, "for the power to rupture this bed, that the schooner might slip into the sea! I clenched my hands with a wild yearning in my heart. Should I ever behold my country again? should I ever meet a living man? The white and frozen steeps glared a bald reply; and I heard nothing but menace in the shrill noises of the wind and the deep and thunderous roaring of the on returning to the cabin to find vacant, to be freed from the scare of the sight of the two silent figures. drew my breath more easily and stopped to glance around. It was the barest cabin I was ever in-uncarpeted, with no other seats than the little benches. I looked at the crucifix, and guessed from the sight of it that, whatever might be the vessel's nation, she had not been sailed by Englishmen. peeped into poor Polly's cage-if a parrot it was-and the sight of the rich plumage carried my imagination to skies of brass, to the mysterious green solitude of tropic forests, to islands fringed with silver surf, in whose sunny flashing sported nude girls of already shows how necessary it was I faultless forms, showing their teeth of pearl in merry laughter, winding amorously with the blue billow, and thus: first I was to haul the figures as filling the aromatic breeze with the melody of their language of the sun. Ha! thought I, sailors see some changes in their time; and with a hearty sigh I stepped into the cook-room.

It was mighty comforting, however

I started, stopped, and fell back pace with a cry. When I had put the figure before the fire he was in the same posture in which he had sat at the table, that is, leaning forward with his face hid in his arms; I had laid him on his side, with his face to the furnace, and in that attitude you would have supposed him a man sound asleep with his arms over his face to shield it from the heat. But now, to my unspeakable astonishment, he lay on his back, with his arms sunk to his side and resting on the deck, and his face upturned. I had made a great fire and its light was strong, and there was also the light of the lanthorn; but the furnace flames played very lively, completely overmastering the steady illumination of the candle, and the man's figure was all a-twitch with moving shadows, and a hundred fantastic shades seemed to steal out of the side and bulkheads and disappear upon my terrified gaze. Then, thought I, suppose after all that the man should be alive, the vitality in him set flowing by the heat? I minded myself of my own simile of the current checked by frost, yet retaining unimpaired the principle of motion; and getting my agitation under some small contro', I approached the body on tiptoe and held the lanthorn to its face.

He looked a man of sixty years of age: his beard was grey and very long, and lay upon his breast like a cloud of smoke. His eyes were closed; the brows shaggy, and the dark scar of a swordwound ran across his forehead from the corner of the left eye to the top of the right brow. His nose was long and I let him lie and returned, weary and hooked, but the repose in his countenance, backed by the vague character of the light in which I inspected him, left his face almost expressionless. was too much alarmed to put my ear to his mouth to mark if he breathed, if two hundred pounds, no mean burden | his respiration. I drew back from him, and put down the lanthorn and watched I went to the cook-house for a dram him. Thought I, it will not do to behere. I can swear there is naught livtion in his breast nor stir in the hair. that was now soft, about his mouth. Yet, so far as the light would suffer me to judge, there was a complexion in his face such as could only come with flowing blood, however languid its circulation, and putting this and the sigh and the movement of the leg together, I felt convinced that the man was alive, and forthwith fell to work, very full of awe and amazement to be sure, to help nature that was struggling in him.

My first step was to heat some brandy, for his head. I next removed his boots and laid bare his feet (which were encased in no less than four pairs of thick woollen stockings, so that I thought when I came to the third pair I should find his legs made of stockings), and after bathing his feet in hot water, of which there was a kettleful, I rubbed them with hot brandy as hard as I could chafe. I then dealt with his hands in the like manner, having once been shipmate with a seaman who told me he had seen a sailor brought to by a severe rubbing of his extremities after he had been carried below supposed to be frozen to death, and continued this exercise till I could rub no longer. Next I opened his lips and, finding he wanted some of his front teeth, I very easily poured a dram of brandy into his mouth. Though I preserved my astonishment all this while, I soon discovered myself working with enthusiasm, with a most passionate longing indeed to recover the man, not only because it pleased me to think of my being an instrument under God of calling a human being, so to speak, out of his grave, but because I yearned for a companion, some one to address, to lighten the hideous solitude of my condition and to assist me in planning our deliver-

I built up a great fire, and with much trouble, for he was very heavy, disposed him from his head to his feet. I likewise continued to chafe his extremities, and then another, till I think he had swallowed a pint. This went on for an hour, during which time he never exhibited the least signs of life; but on a sudden he sighed deep, a tremor ran through him, he sighed again and party raised his right hand, which fell to the deck with a blow; his lips twitched, and a small convulsion of his face compelled the features into the similitude of a grin that instantly faded; then he fetched a succession of sighs and opened his eyes full upon me.

"What is this?" said he in French, in a very hollow feeble voice. I knew enough of his language to enable me to know he spake in French, but that was all. I could not speak a syllable of that tongue.

"You'll be feeling better presently; you must not expect your strength to come in a minute," said I, taking my chance of his understanding me, and speaking that he might not think me a host, for I doubt not I was as white as one; since, to be plain, the mere talking o a figure that I had got to consider as sheerly dead as anybody in a graveyard was alarming enough, and then again there was the sound of my own voice, which I had not exerted in speech for ages, as it seemed to me. He faintly nodded his head, by which perceived he understood me, and said very faintly in English, but with a true French accent, "This is a hard bed.

"I'll speedily mend that," said I, and at once fetched a mattress from the cabin next mine; this I placed beside him, and dragged him on to it, he very weakly assisting. I then brought clothes and rugs to cover him with, and made him a high pillow, and as he lay close to the furnace he could not have been snugger, had he had a wife to tuck him up in his own bed. I put a lump of ice into the kettle, and when the water boiled made him a pint of steaming brandy punch, which I held to his lips in a pannikin whilst I supported his back with my knee; he supped it slowly and painfully but with unmistakable relish, and fetched a sigh of contentment as he lay back. But he would need something more sustaining than brandy and water; and as I guessed his stomach, after so prodigious a fast, would be too weak to support such solids as beef or pork or bacon, I mused a little, turning over in my mind the contents of the larder (as I call it), all which time he eyed me with bewilderment growing in his face; and I then thought I could not do better than manufacture him a broth of oatmeal. wine, bruised biscuit, and a piece of tongue minced very small. This did not take me long in doing, the tongue being near the furnace and soft enough for the knife, and there was nothing to melt but the wine. When the broth was ready I kneeled as before and fed him. He ate greedily, and when the broth was gone looked as if he would have been glad for more. "Now, sir," says I, "sleep if you can:" with which he turned his head and in a few minutes was sound asleep. breathing regularly and deeply.

JOB - PRINTING

Chatham,

Having completed the removal of the ADVANCE establishment to the old Methodist Church building, corner Duke and Cunard Streets, we are now prepared to execute all kinds or

BOOK AND JOB - PRINTING

in first class style. This establishment was the only one in the Provnce in a position to enter into competition with the city offices at the

Dominion Centennial Exhibition

at St. John, where it received a

-MEDAL AND DIPLOMA-

for "Book and Job Printing' and "Letter-Press Printing." This is good evidence of the fine character of its work.

We have also, constantly on sale a large line of blank-forms. such RAILWAY SHIPPING RECEIPTS.
