We were twenty-one days out from Charlestown, and notwithstanding that our old bark was by no means a fast sailer, we had made good progress, and were as near as possible in mid-ocean It was the end of July, and the weather had been of the most glorious description, and very hot; but, after the sultry heat of the tropics, we did not find it oppressive. For two days past we had made little progress. The wind had been light and variable, and now it was a dead calm. The ship was motionless as far as progress was concerned; but her head was boxing all round the compass. We had awings up fore and aft; for, where there was nothing to intercept the burning rays of the July sun, the decks were so hot that the pitch boiled out of the seams.

The dinner was over; the sun was turned and began to swim back. slowly sinking in the west, and we had all come on deck, being anxious to get I shouted, "or it will be all up with as much air as we could, for the cabin poor Nep." At this moment, the dog, of a sugar ship is generally stuffy. seeing we were rapidly approaching The deep, placid sea was more peacehim, relaxed his efforts. "Nep! Not a flaw, not a ripple, not an and he again began to swim towards us. undulation broke the tranquil surface of the glass-like sea. Capt. Sarsfield dog's peril, and the two boats were and the two gentlemen, Mr. Cheesebeing urged through the water at men and Mr. Thompson, were sitting racing speed. It was a moment of on the taffrail smoking their cigars. and Mrs. Carmichael and Miss Julia were mother sat pale and motionless, with reclining in wicker chairs and fanning their hands clasped. The dreadful themselves. At the young lady's feet lay a large Newfoundland dog belonging from the dog, and were rapidly nearing to Capt. Sarsfield, blinking in the sunhim; but we were somewhat nearer, and light which came slanting in under the awning, and now and again looking up into her face and putting out his tongue. as much as to say: "It's dreadfully hot, isn 'tit?"

No one who has not seen a creole girl reclining at her ease can realize the beautiful picture which Julia Carmichael presented as she sat there languidfaninng herself. Apart from the beauty of her features and the striking fairness of her skin, her figure was almost faultless in its symmetry, in the curve of its lines, and beautiful in its flexible sinuosity. She had, too, that natural grace, that untrammeled ease, that refined voluptuousness of attitude and movement which are the natural gifts of the creole, and which no art can counterfeit. But the crowning charm of all was her sweet and gentle disposition. Mrs. Carmichael was a general favorite, but Julia was queen of the ship. Capt. Sarsfield, the gentlemen, and the ship's | boats. company generally were her devoted slaves.

She had been sitting in silence gazing about, but he responded to them by out on the calm sea. Suddenly she standing up on the thwarts and barking turned her head and spoke:

"Capt. Sarsfield," she said, in a soft, he had no idea of what a narrow squeak musical voice, "I think we are going for his life he had had .- All the Year to have a breeze." "Certainly! By all means, my dear young lady. I see no signs of it at present but if you say there is a breeze coming, there is no one on board this ship would think of contradicting "No; but-Capt. Sarsfield"-

I called out. Well, there! belay! What next, Miss Julia?" "Lower one of the quarter boats, and take me for a row. The sea looks very beautiful and I think it would do me good." I elevated my eyebrows and said:

tea will be time enough.' I looked this time at the captain, who gave a smiling assent, saying : "If Miss Carmichael will permit me,

I think I should like a row, too."

"Certainly, Capt. Sarfield, with much pleasure." Then turning to me she said: "The captain can have the | Ice-cream, Lemonade etc. gig, and I will have the quarter boat." "Lay aft the watch," I called out, "and lower the port quarter boat and the gig. And, carpenter," I went on, flet us have the oars up sharp, Miss Carmichael is going to have a row before the breeze comes.'

"Ay, ay, sir," responded the carpenter, and he dived down below in search of the oars.

The two boats were lowered and manned. I took charge of one and the captain of the other.

"Come along, Nep," said Julia, when she had taken her seat. The dog, nothing loth, jumped into the boat and took his station on the prow, as though he was looking out for
