A NEW ZEALAND WATERFALL. I must leave to some able writer the work of picturing to the world in suitable language the grandeur of what will soon be known as the highest waterfall in the world. It consists of three leaps in an almost direct line; but when standing about a quarter of a mile away it has the appearance of a straight leap with two breaks. The upper leaps are equidistant and the lower one shorter. The water issues from a nar-row defile in the rock at the top of the precipice; it then makes one grand leap of 815 feet into a rocky basin on the face of the cliff; issuing forth once more, it makes another fine leap of 751 feet and dash of 338 feet into the pool right at the foot of the precipice. It will thus in the world. Proceeding right on to the pool at the

The Trip from New York to Boston by Fall River and Thence to Annapolis Royal. Lovely Annapolis Valley - Grand Pre, Minas Basin, Longfellow's "Evangeline."

From the far north came interesting reports that the Canadian statesmen had created a nation. There were no longer detached provinces, there was a dominion. There was a strong national feeling, and along with it many national advantages and burdens, such as a high tariff, a great system of national improvements, a vigorous policy and a big national debt. Some of the statistics

HALIFAX FROM THE HARBOR We have heard so much of the "unprecedented growth" of the United States that it startles a Yankee to find that the ratio of Canada's gain in population since the American Revolution has been much greater than that of the United States. The 60,000 suffered with neuralgia and obtained no French whom Great Britain took as citizens relief until advised to try Hag. by the treaty of 1763 have in Canada alone yard's Yellow Oil. Since then I have 1,800,000 descendants, and it is claimed that found it to be an admirable remedy also there are 600,000 more in the United States. or burns, sore throat and rheumatism. In short, say the Canadian authorities, the MRS F. CAMERON, 137 Richmond St. original French of the country, with no French immigration to speak of, have in 126 years increased forty fold. Since the days Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, pre- of Israel in Egypt there has been no such

And all these, with the three millions and more of English, Irish, Scotch and other blood, have been in twenty years molded into a nation which enjoys as much freedom as any other and is resolved to take a high rank among the nations of the world. Surely such a people are worthy of one summer's study. I resolved to give six weeks to it,

The proper starting point is Halifax, and there is no line of steamers thither from New York. By a sailing vessel one may make it in a few days, or some weeks, according to accident or incident. The proper route is by the Fall River line to Boston, where one has two hours to eat breakfast and reach the wharf of the Brunswick line. Steaming out of the harbor at 9:30 a. m. we enter the Annapolis basin on the northwestern shore of Nova Scotia early the next morning, taking the afternoon train at Annapolis, and are in Halifax soon after dark. Time from New York, fifty to fifty-two hours; total expense, including beds and meals, $20. Ocean voyage as short as it could be made and every part of it delightful on the well appointed steamers of that line. No seasickness if you pick the right day to sail. But if there is a 'spanking breeze," and your diaphragm is not well anchored, then you will know how it is yourself. Allow me to recommend lemons and brandy, with complete seclusion Judge McDonald, of Kansas City, spocked a Journal reporter down one day over it quicker that way, because the moveable viscera will not flop up against the stomach as if you were upright. We had a smooth sea and a clear sky and there was not a qualm. My day of misery was to come later in Northumberland straits. Be it remembered that the steamers from Boston land on the north side of the peninsula and thence we proceed by railroad through the Annapolis valley—Nova Scotia's pride-then take a wild whirl through the hills and run down to the basin of Minas and village of Grand Pre. Of course all sentimental readers recognize these names-made poetically historic, or more properly historically poetic, by the author of "Evangeline." Longfellow never saw it, but he has described it well, and by a rare triumph of genius he has made things which were not seem as if they were. On a calm August day the basin seems the natural site for a romance—there is such a rare combination of wild and of pastoral beauty. The rugged hills, which have followed the general line of the Nova Scotia coast, suddenly bend inland and sweep around a grand semicircle of perhaps forty miles; up the center of this in-closed tract runs the deep harbor, from which little but navigable arms extend in all directions, while between them are the water meadows, and rising slowly inland the verdant pastures and fertile farms. Back of these the rocky hills rise abruptly in sullen grandeur, thick set to their summits with spruce, fir and pine. Above is the soft blue sky of August; from the salt water comes a gentle breeze; the bay and creeks are dotted The Pacific mail steamship companies by many fishing craft; hundreds of fat cattle graze on the slopes, and over all the basin seems to breed a peace that passeth (the American) understanding.

China to six. The Chinese Exclusion Act | The summer climate is as near perfection | is the British North American military and and the competition of the Canadian line as is allowed in a sinful world; nor are the naval station, and any day in the year there winters severe, though there is much snow and sleet. But as to the springs, all who are questioned shrug their shoulders. That season is longer than the calendar calls for, and Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is admitted to be very disagreeable. Eightyeight above zero and six below are the extremes of the thermometer, but if it marks above seventy-five the people call it hot. Everybody in Nova Scotia quotes Longfellow with pride as to the description of the country, and everybody laughs at his history. Occasionally, I regret to add, one swears. In the village they still show the blacksmith shop and other houses celebrated in "Evangeline," though, as a matter of fact, I believe all the original houses were burnt. Similarly the French of the Isle de France still show the graves of Paul and Virginia, but shall we Americans criticise them? Have we not had a "Cardiff Giant" and divers sea

MELVILLE ISLAND, HALIFAX HARBOR. then goes tumbling headlong in one wild to French rule; refused to submit to any regulations in trading with the Indians, and per-sistently thwarted all those police measures we entered Halifax, which was then thought worthy of a week's visit.

There is nothing exciting about Halifax. One can lie down and sleep any hour in the twenty-four without being disturbed by the roar of traffic in the streets—that is, unless he is kept awake wondering how 35,000 people can keep so still. It certainly is in sumor children teething. It is a purely veg3table preparation, its ingredients are pubmer the most soul restful place on this continent. "They say" that July and Aulished around each bottle. It is pleasant gust are the quietest months of the year because the sailors and fishermen are gone and many of the soldiers. The climate also is singularly even in midsummer. It does quiets pain, cures diarrhœa and wind colic not rain, strictly speaking; it just dribbles. allays feverishness, destroys worms, and New comers from the States sleep half the simply collapses and the wealtny talk or "going north till cooler weather." There is considerable business, too, chiefly at the wharves—shipping lumber, fish, etc.—and it is done very quietly. In the principal streets elsewhere there is a slight stir, and over all the rest of the city is a peace like unto that described as the final goal of the righteous. It is Nirvana with an American flavor. One longs to witness a dog fight, and an Ohio valley thunder storm would be a real treat. But they seldom have such things in midsummer. Even Mayor-Congressman Hewitt could sleep well in Hal-ifax, for as to insomnia the physicians have not had a case since the American prisoners left at the close of the last war. For situation the city cannot be excelled The harbor entrance is narrow, but once in side one finds it swelling into a placid bay of great size; many miles up it narrows again and beyond that broadens into Bedford basin, which would on many coasts be considered a spacious harbor. Beyond the "point" (just beyond the harbor mouth) the Northwest Arm begins and extends twelve or fifteen miles inland-all the way a crystal sheet of water, with perfectly lovely shoresand thus Halifax is on a good sized peninsula. From the harbor side the land rises rather abruptly, but on the other side the slope is gentle, and for many miles all that side is still covered with the natural forest. Though three million dollars have been appropriated to improve this great park, the administrators have shown their good sense by leaving nearly all of it in a state of nature, only making splendid winding roads through it and clearing away such brush as obstructed the approach to or outlook over the sea. The results are admirable. The man who cannot find rest there must be a restless mortal in-

The Nova Scotians say that their peninsula abounds in fine harbors. It sometimes seems to me that the coast is all harbor. There are so many bays, large and small, so many inlets and arms of the sea, that the province appears to be almost cut across in places, and from any commanding point one can look out upon the sea or upon some large harbor. At first view one would say that Halifax is surrounded by good harbors; yet it is scarcely more so than any other considerable city of the province. The Nova Scotian is almost everywhere in sight of the sea; as a natural consequence almost every native has some natural talent for sea faring. As the Greeks and Phœnicians were the navigators of the ancient world, because their location made the sea more inviting to them than the land. and as the Portuguese were the most daring explorers of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth cen-

may say, with a talent for sailing. Any tenyear-old boy can rig a sail on a little boat. almost any girl of that age will venture on the water as readily as on the land; and so sailing parties in Nova Scotia take the place in good society which carriage rides and lawn parties hold in places further inland. If there is in the world a sheet of water better suited to at once gratify and excite this taste than the Northwest Arm, or back harbor, of Halifax, I have not heard of it. Everywhere the natural park gives fair view of this bay; everywhere the slope is gentle, and almost every rod of the shore is a natural wharf, the rock or gravel rising just abruptly enough, and the whole front "clean"-that is, no marshes or spongy shores. The result can be surmised. On any fair day the surface is dotted with all sorts and sizes of sail and row boats. There are Sunday school picnics on the opposite shore, private picnics in rocky dells at the heads of little bays, "select parties of single gentlemen," with the usual bod-ily comforts and excitants, drifting lazily they care not whither, and many and many a little catboat with only two persons (of the two sexes), with whom conversation so far outweighs destination that they do not really care which way they drift. And for three months of summer this is an almost daily sight. There are indeed no storms to make the Northwest Arm dangerous and very few to make it uncomfortable. It is one of nature's selected and protected nooks in which to laze and drift, eat, drink, smoke, rest, doze or make love, as age, occasion or temperament may incline. The soul weary and brain baked business man of the States might well give it verdant in memory will be the sweet August day I lounged, lazed, laughed and drifted on the Northwest Arm! Just back of Halifax, in the city suburbs indeed, rises that famous natural mole called Citadel Hill, and on it is a British fortification which the newspaper man or stranger may not enter. Around and near it are the commodious quarters of the troops, for Halifax Scarlet coats are everywhere, and their devotion to the fair sex is uniform. In the CANADA'S LEADING NEWSPAPER splendid public garden of the city (which is a much finer thing in proportion for Halifax than Central park is for New York) the scarlet coat and the white apron of the nurse girl supply the most delightful bits of color on the green landscape. Like everything else about Halifax the sight is restful—it really refreshes the eye to gaze on them. Sir John Ross, commander of the British forces in Canada, gives the soldiers a great deal of social liberty, and they reciprocate to a sur-prising degree. The waterfall that has yet been discovered cruelty consisted in their forced and sudden departure without fair warning, which resulted in the separation of some families and the extreme poverty of many. In palliation of this, the British-Canadian writers allege that if the French had not been "taken unawares" they could not have been taken without much expense and some bloodshed; and, as it was, many escaped and stirred up serious trouble among the Indians.
