-Christian Rossetti. THE GENI OF THE MINE.

The claimant to peculiar respect on the score of sanctity of life varies in various lands, or, for that matter, in any habitat. He may be a hypocrite, or a fanatic, deceiver or dupe-a man of genuine worth-though, perhaps, for reasons he would scout-or a loafer winning, on acquaintance, deserved contempt. I shall put my old friend, Moung Ko, without a second's hesitation, in an upper grade of "holy men." He walked consciously on high levels of his profession. Not a phoonghie in all Burmah was better versed in the lore. not merely of the pagoda, but of nature and of life. His fame for charity was just, and I at least have never been able. since the occurrence of the events I propose to relate, to hold that the wild hill men of Anapoora were wholly mistaken in calling Moung Ko a seer as well as a priest. I shall have to show that he, too, had failed where, verily, popes have failed. And it may be that the weird gift, never a joy to its possessor, was linked in hidden depths with the romance of a strange career and the pain of a long fight for repentance. To be coherent, and even to compass conciseness, it is generally well to begin at the beginning. Moreover, my first meeting with Moung Ko is an integral part of my tale. A hint was offered even then which I was slow to seize, but which later was bathed in revealing light. The existence of the cipher must be divined before an interpretation can be supplied. I had penetrated a new district and encountered an accident. A luckless slip on the shelving ledge of a remote gorge had nearly sent me to my doom. I escaped through the circumstance that the thick scrub of the wilderness straggled down the cliff side to wherever there was a layer of earth to support vegetation. For long hours I remained in a precarious situation, lodged, with a sprained ankle, amongst brambles; above me, frowning rocks; beneath me, the abyss. The outlook was black. If I stirred, the odds were that I should go over the brink and be dashed to pieces; if I stayed where I was, I must starve. Again-and I had plenty of space to think the thing through-if I shouted myself hoarse nobedy was likely to come and if the improbable became a fact, and there was a response, I had no insurance that aid and not a cruel thrust would be the result. It was all uncertain whether friends or enemies were in the neighbor-

In the retrospect it seems to me that passed into a stupor of despair. Surely of the experience. and fever I cried aloud at intervals a full score of times. The silence remained unbroken. But a queer portent perplexed my mind. From where I was lying the opposite bend of the valley was distinctly in view, and twice across the line of vision flitted a grotesque, undersized figure in a costume certainly not known to me as favored by any Burman, Shan or Karen, male or female. The draperies were flowing and dark, scarcely dis-tinguishable from the color of the rocks. I shivered involuntarily. Did the creature belong to the realm of honest, practical existence? Or was I delirious? I pinched myself, as those do who cannot be sure if they are awake or dreaming. The dwarfish apparition did not vanish. It went on to the head of the defile and was finally lost in the shadows of the teak trees. Another idea, belonging to a state of weakness, came to me. Was it a warning that I must expect the worst?

"Softly, friend; have courage. Move not. I will help you." Sweeter words I never heard spoken in any vernacular than those I thus translate. I knew their meaning, for I | learned-in fulfillment of the ritual of had picked up not a little of the native | the pagoda. Yet, by the law, binding tongue. They were whispered literally on phoonghies, he could possess no perinto my ear. The new comer had ap- sonal property; and I had seen what I proached so silently that there was danger even in his announcement of kindly

The sharp surprise made me start. I tried to look the speaker in the face, and, in the effort, swayed towards the precipice. A swarthy, sinewy hand gripped me and held me back.

"Did I not say 'softly,' friend?" expostulated the stranger, with gentle reproach in his accents. "Thanks," I answered; "but my ankle is twisted. How will you get me out of

Moung Ko was not a man of unnecessary words. For reply he drew aside, with his arm, a bush immediately to my right. A natural recess was disclosed, and, as there was light beyond, I surmised the existence of a tunnel or passage. It was doubtless in this way that he had reached my ledge. And now he proved the wonderful muscular strength that resides in the Burman frame. Stretching himself on the uneven ground he grasped with one arm a buttress of rock, and, with the other, he lent me a support which was entirely adequate for my deliverance. The pain of the injured limb made me wince at every movement; but I set my teeth together, and, trust-ing to the directions acted rather than uttered, I was released from my position

Then I saw that I owed my safety to a phoonghie or priest. I have already infarm, well watered, good cedar fencing, 2½ miles from Chatham, sold in two lots if desired. If not sold before next May will be offered at Public Auction. Terms easy. Apply to

The light was gone, and I could have fancied that I had not really heard those words of weird fate which, nevertheless, I was to remember after many days.

While we talked Moung Ko was deftly rooms down stairs, 2 do up stairs (or more i preparing and applying a cool compress to the swollen joint. It was patent that MRS. His head was bent down, and this was my one warning of the phoonghie's uneasiness. His reply

"There is no village in that direction; it is all waste and barren; there are no paths, either. The hill folk talk like you of things that it is ill to see. They are cowards. But I say that bushes take wonderful shapes; and sometimes they move in the wind." It sounded like satire, and Moung Ko was a clever diplomatist. He had nearly persuaded me that I was the victim of a delusion. A man recovering from a swoon may easily be cheated by shadows. I let the subject drop ows. I let the subject drop. It occurred to me later that Moung Ko was relieved my energies suddenly flagged and that I to find that I did not insist on the reality there was excuse. But as the weary day I had fallen into capital hands. If a wore on my faculties regained their edge. tie of kinship or creed had existed, I Monuments, Headstones, Tab-I determined to have a cast for dear life. | could not have been better cared for. | lets, Mantels & Table-tops, With much of the gambler's recklessness | And at the end of a week I was able to move gingerly about with a crutch. My host now suggested migration to a zyat, or hostelry for travelers, hard by his pagoda, in a village of the lower plateau. I was perfectly willing to move. It would give me opportunities for becom-ing acquainted with the inhabitants of the district and with local customs and characteristics that were hitherto only matters of hearsay.

The man who had laid me under so great an obligation was more and more a marvel and a mystery. His life, as gradually disclosed, seemed full of contradictions. It was abundantly clear that he was held in extreme reverence by the brethren of his order as well as by the villagers. But, with innate skepticism. I declined to think that there was anything in his common fame as a seer. Still, he accepted the homage, and it was equally hard to believe him an impostor. Your vulgar trickster does not devote himself to the wants of a poor and primitive people as Moung Ko did. Without fee or reward, he was always at their service. He was strict-none more so, I had seen. Perhaps I lingered in the district longer than I should otherwise have done because I wanted to fit an answer to my enigma. Tragic circumstances supplied it. The tribesmen of Upper Anapoora were turbulent and headstrong, and it was one of Moung Ko's most difficult and delicate tasks to maintain peace.

"There has always been a strife between mountain and plain. Two races touch in these hills," he said. "The feud will break out afresh one day in spite of me. Yes, and soon. I have heard the sound of the dismal wind-of the war wind-sighing in the air where no forest trees are. It will come, and then the vengeance falls and I go.' The sad eyes were gazing through the veil we all seek to pierce but may not. Moung Ko was in boding contemplation rizon of his fellows. I frowned at myself, for again I was conscious of a certain eerie impression, produced in defiance of reason, upon my mind. And, to an outsider's judgment, the sky had no clouds.

Although I was a guest, and not a prisoner, and although Moung Ko had expressly stated that he trusted me, it was a notion that grew in strength as the days went by that I was watched, and that Moung Ko preferred that I should not wander far afield. Call it ingratitude, or the mere spirit
