STANLEY'S NARROW ESCAPE FROM STARVA-TION-A YEAR FULL OF SUFFERING AND

London, Nov. 25.-Mr. McKinnon, chairman of the Emin relief committee, has received a letter from Stanley, dated August 5, written at Kafurro, an Arab settlement on the Karwagwe. Stanley says:
"My last report was sent by Salim Ben Mohammed in the early part of September, 1888. Over a year full of stirring events has passed since then." Stanley then goes on to recount the arrangements made by him to meet Emin and describes how he hunted up the rear columns; tells of daily conflicts with Kambutta dwarfs, and gives in minute details a story of terri-and gives in minute details a story of terrible suffering and depletion of his camp by starvation. At one period in December a foraging party was sent out and did not return for eight days, leaving the camp destitute. "This," said Stanley, "had been my nearest approach to absolute starvation in all my African experiences. Alterether twenty one persons approach in together twenty-one persons succumbed in this dreadful camp. We reached Fort Bodo plantations on the 20th. "Not a word has been heard of Emin, or of Jephson, during the seven months of my absence. Knowing the latter to be an energetic man, we were left to conjecture what had detained Jephson, even if the affairs of his province had detained Emin. On Dec. 23 the united expedition continued its march eastward, and as we had now to work by relays, owing to fifty extra loads, we did not reach Ituri Ferry, which was any last camp in the forest region before Brazilian clergy abstain from politics.

Joy in Jasper.

CAN recommend Burdock Blood Bitters as a sure cure for scrofula. I had it for four years, and was so bad at one time that I was allowed to see that the we did not reach Ituri Ferry, which was our last camp in the forest region before emerging on grass land, until January 9th. My anxiety about Jephson and Emin would not permit me to dawdle on the road making double trips in this manner; so selecting a rich plantation and a good camping site east of Ituri Ferry, which was our last camp in the forest region before emerging on grass land, until January 9th. My anxiety about Jephson and Emin would not permit me to dawdle on the road making double trips in this manner; so selecting a rich plantation and a good camping site east of Ituri Ferry, which was our last camp in the forest region before emerging on grass land, until January 9th. My anxiety about Jephson and Emin would not permit me to dawdle on the road making double trips in this manner; so selecting a rich plantation and a good camping site east of Ituri Ferry. Nelson, and on January 11 continued my march eastward. The people of the plains, fearing a repetition of fighting of December, 1887, flocked to camp as we advanced and formally tendered their submission, agreeing to give contributions and supplies. The blood of brotherhood was made, an exchange of gifts was made and firm friend-ship established. The huts of our camp were constructed by natives and water was brought to the expedition as soon as a halt-ing place was decided on. We heard no news of white men on Lake Albert from the plain people until on the 16th at a place called Gaviras messengers from Kavalli came with a batch of letters from Jephson and Emin dated in November." The letters which are held to indicate that the Peters expedition was not massacred.

Sleepless Worry

Soften occasioned by a harassing, tickling cough which might easily be cured if the right remedy—Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam was made use of. Its soothing, healing and expectorant qualities make it wonderfully useful in every family for coughs and colds.

The Catholics of America have raised to the rebellion fomented by Egyptians while Jephson and the Pasha were on the way to Regof, in which the two were made prisoners, the malcontents having told the people stories that Stanley and Emin were plotting to take them into slavery. The soldiers, however, took no active part and prevented indignities to the prisoners. Plans were also made by rebels to entrap Stanley on his return and strip him of all his valuables. Things were in this condition when the Mahdi suddenly The Catholics of America have raised this condition when the Mahdi suddenly arrived at Lado and sent Dervish messengers to Pasha demanding the instant > and taking many women and children prisoners, and capturing all ores and ammunition. The officers and a large number of soldiers returned to Nuggi, where they made a stand. All was then chaos and confusion and the position of the prisoners exceedingly unpleasant. The letters further detailed the dangers to the prisoners and garrison at Nuggi from the Mahdists, the gradual revulsion of feeling among people in favor of Stanley and against the Egyptian rebels and express a fear of the worst if Stanley's arrival is much longer delayed. An account is then given of the attempt of the soldiers to retake Regof, their disastrous repulse by the Mahdi in which the number of the Pasha's worst enemies were killed, and subsequently the refusal of the soldiers to fight unless the Pasha was liberated; the consequent release of Pasha and his departure for Wadelai and subsequent flight to Tunguree.

Stanley immediately despatched couriers to Jephson, who arrived at Kervallis Feb. 6th, without the Pasha, who was, it seems, in without the Pasha, who was, it seems, in one of his wavering moods, and Jephson could not tell what he meant to do. He said the Pasha wanted to go away, but would not move. Stanley then sent couriers to Emin insisting on something definite, otherwise it would be his (Stanley) down to destroy the relief stores and the standard of the stores and the stores are stores ley's) duty to destroy the relief stores and march for home. This was followed Feb.

13 by the safe arrival of Emin and party at Kawallis.

white, alluding to the methods adopted by him to remain in power, says:—

"Walpole took the pleasures, the honors, the prizes of the world as they came in his way, and he thoroughly relished and enjoyed them; but that his heart was seriously set strenuously, devotedly,—was the pro-motion of good government, and the frus-tration and confusion of its enemies. When men got in his way he thrust them aside without misgiving or remorse, just as a commander in the field would remove a meddling, wrong-headed or incompetent general of division without remorse. But to be remorseless is a very different thing from being unscrupulous. I am not aware of a single proof that Walpole ever began these intrigues against his enemies which they were always so ready to practise against him. * * * A candid and particular examination of the political history of that time, so far as the circumstances are known to us, leads to the conclusion that of all his contemporaries from men of genius like Bolingbroke and Cartaret, from able and brilliant men like Townshend and Chesterfield, Wyndham and Pulteney, down to a mediocre personage like the Duke of Newcastle, Walpole was the least unscrupulous of the men at that time, the most straightforward, bold and open, and the least addicted to scheming and cabal. He relied more than they did, not less, upon what, after all, in every age is the only solid foundation of political power, though it may not always lead to the longest terms of office—upon his own superior capacity, more constant principle, firmer will and clearer vision,"

> Independence. The Montreal Herald says:-

"It is nearly time Canada busied herself about her independence, Australia, which is a baby amongst nations, is already considering the propriety of establishing an Australian nation. The Australians seem to think that remaining in Imperial leading strings is detrimental to their interests, and when a recent general election was held and one party cried out "Imperial Federation," the other shouted back "No! independence." And the independent party swept the polls. Canada is a couple of hundred
