

BUSINESS NOTICE.

The "MIRAMICHI ADVANCE" is published at Chatham, N. B., every Thursday morning in time for despatch by the earliest mails of that day.

Advertisements, other than yearly or by the season, are inserted at eight cents per line for the first insertion, and three cents per line for each continuation.

It has permanently cured THOUSANDS of cases pronounced by doctors hopeless. If you have premonitory symptoms, such as Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, etc., don't delay, but use PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

Robert Murray BARRISTER-AT-LAW, Notary Public, Insurance Agent, ETC. ETC. ETC. CHATHAM N. B.

D. G. MACALUHLAN, Barrister-at-Law, NOTARY PUBLIC, ETC. BATHURST, N. B.

DesBrisay & DesBrisay, BARRISTERS, Attorneys, Notaries, Conveyancers, &c. OFFICES, St. Patrick Street, Bathurst, N. B.

G. B. FRASER, ATTORNEY & BARRISTER NOTARY PUBLIC, AGENT FOR THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Warren C. Winslow, BARRISTER, AND ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Solicitor of the City of Montreal, CHATHAM, N. B.

Hotels. WAVERLEY HOTEL, NEWCASTLE, - - - - - MIRAMICHI, N. B.

Canada House, Corner Water and St. John Streets, CHATHAM. LARGEST HOTEL IN CHATHAM.

Sample Rooms, GOOD STABLING on the premises, Daniel Desmond, Proprietor.

ADAMS HOUSE, ADJOINING BANK OF MONTREAL, WELLINGTON ST., CHATHAM, N. B.

GOOD STABLING, &c. THOMAS FLANAGAN, Proprietor.

Dunlap, Cooke & Co., Merchant Tailors, 101 WATER ST., N. S.

MIRAMICHI ADVANCE

VOL. 16- No. 4 CHATHAM NEW BRUNSWICK, NOVEMBER 21, 1889. D. G. SMITH, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR. TERMS-$1.50 a Year, in Advance.

General Business.

Tea, Sugar, Beef, Pork, Bacon, Hams, Flour and Meal, and all other things generally found in a Grocery.

Great Reduction in prices of Dry Goods & Groceries LOWER THAN EVER!

NEW GOODS. NEW CLOTHING. I have the largest and best stock of MEN'S BOYS AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING.

NEW HATS. NEW BOOTS. In Hats and Caps, Boots and Shoes you will find most assortment and prices low.

NEW DRESS GOODS. NEW. My stock of dress goods is not so large as usual but it has a nice and extra good value.

NEW PRINTS. NEW MUSLINS. The Prints this year are in many new designs and low in price, also Colored and White Muslin.

NEW SUNSHADES. NEW GLOVES. SUNSHADES: They are good, large sizes with nice handles.

NEW JERSEYS. NEW SHAWLS. In Black and Colored. Very cheap. New Stock and Fancy Dry Goods of every description.

NEW. NEW. TEA, TOBACCO, GUNS, REVOLVERS, TRUNKS, VALISES, ROOM PAPER, &c.

THE CHEAP CASH STORE. JAMES BROWN, Newcastle, May, 25th, 1884.

PIANOS. The Subscriber having taken the Agency of the Emerson Piano, the best and cheapest in the States, and show Catalogue Prices and a sample instrument, as well as requiring one.

"THE FACTORY" JOHN MCDONALD, (Successor to George Cassidy) Manufacturer of Doors, Sashes, Mouldings and Builders' furnishings generally.

THE EAST END FACTORY, CHATHAM, N. B. HAYWARD'S YELLOW OIL CURES RHEUMATISM.

FREEMAN'S WORM POWDERS. Are pleasant to take. Contain their own Purgative. Is a safe, sure and effectual destroyer of worms in Children or Adults.

GENERAL BUSINESS

DANIEL PATTON, ST. JOHN, N. B. DIRECT IMPORTER OF WINES of all kinds, BRANDIES case and in wood, WHISKEYS, GIN, etc.

Stock-in-hand consists of importations from Epervay, Cognac, Bordeaux, Xeres de la Frontera, Oporto, Teague, Cognac, London, Dublin and Glasgow, besides those from all Canada, Centre of production.

GEO. A. CUTTER, DIRECT IMPORTER OF. WATER ST. - CHATHAM, N. B.

PIANOS, ORGANS, & SEWING MACHINES. Thomas, Bell and Dominion Organs. EVANS BROS. BELL, DOMINION, NEW-COMBE & HEINTZMAN PIANOS.

Violins, Accordions, Sheet Music and Music Books. THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK.

RICHARD A. McCURDY, PRESIDENT. ASSETS, - - - $126,082,153.56.

THE LARGEST AND BEST Life Insurance Co. in the World. THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. has Paid to Policy-holders since organizing $72,451,839.80.

JOHN S. STEARNS, General Manager, Halifax, N. S. WARREN C. WINSLOW, Agent, Chatham, N. B.

SAY! JUST READ THIS. WHAT YOU CAN GET AT THE Newcastle Drug Store. PLUSH GOODS, - - - CONSISTING OF: Brush and Comb Cases, Ladies' and Gents' Dressing Cases.

SILVERWARE, - - - CONSISTING OF: CARD BASKETS, BREAKFAST CRUETS SALTS, ETC. - - - ALSO: Cups, Vases, Toilet Sets, Fancy Moustache Cups, Cut Glass.

NEWCASTLE DRUG STORE, NEXT NEW POST OFFICE. E. LEE STREET, PROPRIETOR. Newcastle, Dec. 11th 1886.

Miramichi Advance.

CHATHAM, N. B. - - - NOVEMBER 21, 1889. GENERAL NEWS AND NOTES

B. T. Barnum's show is said to have captured London. For Frost Bites. THERE is no better remedy for frost bites, chilblains, and similar troubles than Hagar's Yellow Oil.

The window glass manufacturers of Ohio and Indiana have combined. Joy to Jasper. I CAN recommend Burdock Blood Bitters as a sure cure for scrofula.

Sleepless Worry. IS often occasioned by a harassing, tickling cough which might easily be cured if the right remedy-Hagar's Pectoral Balm was made use of.

The Best Ever Made. GENTLEMEN, -My trouble was heart disease and dyspepsia, but I took two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters and one of Hagar's Pills and got well.

Important to Workmen. ARTIZANS, mechanics, and laboring-men are liable to sudden accidents and injuries, as well as painful colds, stiff joints and lameness.

What is Wanted. IS something that will make a man sleep well, eat well and rise in the morning refreshed and strong, with none of the worn out tired feeling sure to be found when over-tired, dyspepsia or diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels and blood exist.

If the Sufferers from Consumption, Scrofula and General Debility will try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, they will find immediate relief and a permanent benefit.

Five thousand miners in the Monongahela valley have decided to strike for an advance of half a cent a bushel.

Fish Wanted by G. P. Curtis & Co., GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANTS, 176 ATLANTIC AVENUE, BOSTON - - - MASS.

EARLE'S HOTEL, Cor. Canal & Centre Streets, NEAR BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The best Hotel in the lower part of the City for Tourists, Professionals and Business Men, Commercial Travellers, Agents, Etc.

Earle's Hotel has been newly and handsomely furnished and decorated. Contains a Grand Exchange, Passenger Elevator, Railroad and Steamboat Ticket, Telegraph Office and Billiard Room.

The Normandie, BROADWAY & 28th STREET. European Plan; Restaurant Unsurpassed.

The Normandie, BROADWAY & 28th STREET. European Plan; Restaurant Unsurpassed. ESTERBROOK, Inspector of Buildings, says, "Every room is a place of security for its occupants."

SAMUEL SULLIVAN COX.

AN EXTREMELY VARIED AND FAIRLY SUCCESSFUL CAREER.

He was Only Incidentally a Humorist, but Always a Practical and Hard Working Legislator - A Quarter of a Century in Congress - 1857 to 1889.

Now that Congressman Samuel Sullivan Cox has passed to his eternal rest, the American public fully realizes the good work he did. He was a humorist, it is true; but he was far more.

Mr. Cox's first speech in congress attracted much attention, and his address late in 1859, when he described a brother congressman as flying from the field of Bull Run, hanging to the tail of a stampeded steed.

Mr. Speaker, there never was an interest in this country so cared for by the government as this bill. Our first efforts, at least in New England, have been in the line of education - I refer to New England, where I was educated - when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across the sea and settle Massachusetts, the six aged Puritans:

Up from the sands, ye codlings, peep, And your tails always [laughter and applause]. So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty and sanctity.

The main object of this bill is to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of food. It would send out the seed broadcast that fish take up in their residence in the city in 1862, 1870 he was re-elected; in 1872 he was beaten for congressman at large.

The next election he was elected Democrat in again, and was re-elected again and again till his years of service lacked but little of a quarter of a century. Of his return to congress, the president himself said in his history says:

"It was not possible for Mr. Cox to keep out of the political field. His stamp, his ready wit, and above all his good nature and good sense, commended him to the New York Democrats. He has been a member of industry. In all the pressure of congressional life, to the duties of which he has given assiduous attention, he has devoted much time to literature and has published several original and entertaining books."

The first of these books, "The Buckeye Abroad," has often returned to plague the author. In its pages he expressed without reserve and with all the fervor of youth his immature ideas on Catholicism, Ireland, free trade and many other subjects, on which it is scarcely necessary to add, his opinion was not shared by his countrymen. Nevertheless these were his expressions in type, and they have many times been quoted, both in congress and the campaign press.

Mr. Cox served as a member of the committee of foreign affairs, for which he was eminently qualified by his experience in diplomacy. His extensive travels in foreign lands and his close study and research. His mind was retentive and vigorous. When in 1888 he was a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives in the legislature of the state of New York, he was better adapted for the position than Mr. Cox, because of his perfect familiarity with the rules and practice of the house. As speaker pro tem, he proved himself an excellent presiding officer, bearing himself with dignity and a measure of force little to be expected from so slight a form.

Every Congressman regretted that Mr. Cox was to leave Washington for Constantinople. He had been so long in the house that they could not bear the idea of parting with him. He was appointed in March, 1888, and soon after he took his departure from New York for the scene of his new labors over the city. The sultan gave him a most cordial reception, and it is certain that he made a most favorable impression upon the Turkish court. He closed up many diplomatic tangles, and the relations of the United States and Turkey were never more friendly. At length Mr. Cox weary of the Orient, resigned, came home and early resumed his place in congress. "I yearned for the society of you gentlemen," he said in one of his speeches after his return, and the good natured laugh which followed showed that the yearning was not unfounded. His greatest success was to come. Almost alone he extracted his party from an absurd position in regard to the admission of his four strong opponents, Washington and the Dakotas was a continued effort. From December, 1887, to March, 1889, save about six years, he was continuously in congress, and only Judge Kelley and Sam Ragsdale, of Pennsylvania, outranked him in continuous service. His nickname of "Sunset Cox" may have been given in consequence of his initials, "S. S.," but his first application was soon after the publication in his paper, The Statesman, of Columbus, O., May 19, 1853, of a sophomoric description of a sunset, beginning as follows:

A GREAT OLD SUNSET. What a beautiful sunset was that of last night! How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun! We do not remember ever to have seen the like on our rural globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating mist, which colored the foliage and lightened every object in its own rich tints. The colors grew deeper and richer until the golden ladder was transformed into a storm cloud, full of flashing lightning, which leaped in dazzling zig-zag all round and over the city. The wind arose with fury, the slender shrubs and giant trees made obedience to its mastery. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus' man and by.

As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder roared grandly, and the lightnings flashed in every direction with hearty chorus. The south and east received the copious showers, and the west all at once brightened up in its long, polished belts of azure, worthy of a Sicilian sky. Presently a cloud appeared in the azure belt, in the form of a castellated mountain, in the distance, revealing strange forms of peerless faces and alabaster temples, and glories rare and grand in this mundane sphere. It reminds us of Wordsworth's splendid verse in his "Excursion":

The appearance instantaneously disclosed Was of a mighty city, bodily airy, A wilderness of buildings, standing far, And self withdrawn into a wondrous depth, Far sinking into splendor without end. Mr. Cox's first speech in congress attracted much attention, and his address late in 1859, when he described a brother congressman as flying from the field of Bull Run, hanging to the tail of a stampeded steed, "like an ancient horse from hunting Troy on the shoulders of Aeneas," made a nation laugh in spite of its sorrow. In this same speech he summed up the Missouri controversy of the time in such excitement and humorous style that it was at once accepted as correct by the public. This was the speech in which he told how Fremont's greatness was blasted by the consuming error of "Blair's Rhetoric" - that being the title of a popular school book of the time. One of his last speeches was on the fisheries and fish conservation, in which he said: "I refer to New England, where I was educated - when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across the sea and settle Massachusetts, the six aged Puritans: 'What is your object? What do you intend?' 'To worship God and catch fish!' [laughter]. 'Then the king rejoined: 'Give you the charter for the fish, and the apostles' own calling.' [Renewed laughter]. 'Why, sir, even in the early churches of New England the early and pious Puritans used to sing: 'Ye monsters of the bubbling deep, Up from the sands, ye codlings, peep, And your tails always [laughter and applause]. So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty and sanctity. In later times New England has obtained its fame as a fishing ground, giving free sale for her fish, while the miserable man in Chicago cannot get free salt for his pork. [laughter]. Congress has been so long in session for the fisherman. For many decades it gave bounties at so much per cod. These bounties have not become less numerous of late years, but the bounty ceased. They are a power in numbers and influence. They number a million or more of men constantly engaged in their hard and hazardous occupation. Their calling is associated at the present time with some curiously wringing in diplomacy. [laughter]. But wherever they are, and wherever they adventure, they should be cared for by the fostering arm of the government. The main object of this bill is to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of food. It would send out the seed broadcast that fish take up in their residence in the city in 1862, 1870 he was re-elected; in 1872 he was beaten for congressman at large. The next election he was elected Democrat in again, and was re-elected again and again till his years of service lacked but little of a quarter of a century. Of his return to congress, the president himself said in his history says: 'It was not possible for Mr. Cox to keep out of the political field. His stamp, his ready wit, and above all his good nature and good sense, commended him to the New York Democrats. He has been a member of industry. In all the pressure of congressional life, to the duties of which he has given assiduous attention, he has devoted much time to literature and has published several original and entertaining books.' The first of these books, 'The Buckeye Abroad,' has often returned to plague the author. In its pages he expressed without reserve and with all the fervor of youth his immature ideas on Catholicism, Ireland, free trade and many other subjects, on which it is scarcely necessary to add, his opinion was not shared by his countrymen. Nevertheless these were his expressions in type, and they have many times been quoted, both in congress and the campaign press. Mr. Cox served as a member of the committee of foreign affairs, for which he was eminently qualified by his experience in diplomacy. His extensive travels in foreign lands and his close study and research. His mind was retentive and vigorous. When in 1888 he was a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives in the legislature of the state of New York, he was better adapted for the position than Mr. Cox, because of his perfect familiarity with the rules and practice of the house. As speaker pro tem, he proved himself an excellent presiding officer, bearing himself with dignity and a measure of force little to be expected from so slight a form. Every Congressman regretted that Mr. Cox was to leave Washington for Constantinople. He had been so long in the house that they could not bear the idea of parting with him. He was appointed in March, 1888, and soon after he took his departure from New York for the scene of his new labors over the city. The sultan gave him a most cordial reception, and it is certain that he made a most favorable impression upon the Turkish court. He closed up many diplomatic tangles, and the relations of the United States and Turkey were never more friendly. At length Mr. Cox weary of the Orient, resigned, came home and early resumed his place in congress. 'I yearned for the society of you gentlemen,' he said in one of his speeches after his return, and the good natured laugh which followed showed that the yearning was not unfounded. His greatest success was to come. Almost alone he extracted his party from an absurd position in regard to the admission of his four strong opponents, Washington and the Dakotas was a continued effort. From December, 1887, to March, 1889, save about six years, he was continuously in congress, and only Judge Kelley and Sam Ragsdale, of Pennsylvania, outranked him in continuous service. His nickname of 'Sunset Cox' may have been given in consequence of his initials, 'S. S.,' but his first application was soon after the publication in his paper, The Statesman, of Columbus, O., May 19, 1853, of a sophomoric description of a sunset, beginning as follows: A GREAT OLD SUNSET. What a beautiful sunset was that of last night! How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun! We do not remember ever to have seen the like on our rural globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating mist, which colored the foliage and lightened every object in its own rich tints. The colors grew deeper and richer until the golden ladder was transformed into a storm cloud, full of flashing lightning, which leaped in dazzling zig-zag all round and over the city. The wind arose with fury, the slender shrubs and giant trees made obedience to its mastery. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots 'turned up their whites' to see Zephyrus' man and by.

even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus' man and by. As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder roared grandly, and the lightnings flashed in every direction with hearty chorus. The south and east received the copious showers, and the west all at once brightened up in its long, polished belts of azure, worthy of a Sicilian sky. Presently a cloud appeared in the azure belt, in the form of a castellated mountain, in the distance, revealing strange forms of peerless faces and alabaster temples, and glories rare and grand in this mundane sphere. It reminds us of Wordsworth's splendid verse in his "Excursion":

The appearance instantaneously disclosed Was of a mighty city, bodily airy, A wilderness of buildings, standing far, And self withdrawn into a wondrous depth, Far sinking into splendor without end. Mr. Cox's first speech in congress attracted much attention, and his address late in 1859, when he described a brother congressman as flying from the field of Bull Run, hanging to the tail of a stampeded steed, "like an ancient horse from hunting Troy on the shoulders of Aeneas," made a nation laugh in spite of its sorrow. In this same speech he summed up the Missouri controversy of the time in such excitement and humorous style that it was at once accepted as correct by the public. This was the speech in which he told how Fremont's greatness was blasted by the consuming error of "Blair's Rhetoric" - that being the title of a popular school book of the time. One of his last speeches was on the fisheries and fish conservation, in which he said: "I refer to New England, where I was educated - when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across the sea and settle Massachusetts, the six aged Puritans: 'What is your object? What do you intend?' 'To worship God and catch fish!' [laughter]. 'Then the king rejoined: 'Give you the charter for the fish, and the apostles' own calling.' [Renewed laughter]. 'Why, sir, even in the early churches of New England the early and pious Puritans used to sing: 'Ye monsters of the bubbling deep, Up from the sands, ye codlings, peep, And your tails always [laughter and applause]. So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty and sanctity. In later times New England has obtained its fame as a fishing ground, giving free sale for her fish, while the miserable man in Chicago cannot get free salt for his pork. [laughter]. Congress has been so long in session for the fisherman. For many decades it gave bounties at so much per cod. These bounties have not become less numerous of late years, but the bounty ceased. They are a power in numbers and influence. They number a million or more of men constantly engaged in their hard and hazardous occupation. Their calling is associated at the present time with some curiously wringing in diplomacy. [laughter]. But wherever they are, and wherever they adventure, they should be cared for by the fostering arm of the government. The main object of this bill is to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of food. It would send out the seed broadcast that fish take up in their residence in the city in 1862, 1870 he was re-elected; in 1872 he was beaten for congressman at large. The next election he was elected Democrat in again, and was re-elected again and again till his years of service lacked but little of a quarter of a century. Of his return to congress, the president himself said in his history says: 'It was not possible for Mr. Cox to keep out of the political field. His stamp, his ready wit, and above all his good nature and good sense, commended him to the New York Democrats. He has been a member of industry. In all the pressure of congressional life, to the duties of which he has given assiduous attention, he has devoted much time to literature and has published several original and entertaining books.' The first of these books, 'The Buckeye Abroad,' has often returned to plague the author. In its pages he expressed without reserve and with all the fervor of youth his immature ideas on Catholicism, Ireland, free trade and many other subjects, on which it is scarcely necessary to add, his opinion was not shared by his countrymen. Nevertheless these were his expressions in type, and they have many times been quoted, both in congress and the campaign press. Mr. Cox served as a member of the committee of foreign affairs, for which he was eminently qualified by his experience in diplomacy. His extensive travels in foreign lands and his close study and research. His mind was retentive and vigorous. When in 1888 he was a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives in the legislature of the state of New York, he was better adapted for the position than Mr. Cox, because of his perfect familiarity with the rules and practice of the house. As speaker pro tem, he proved himself an excellent presiding officer, bearing himself with dignity and a measure of force little to be expected from so slight a form. Every Congressman regretted that Mr. Cox was to leave Washington for Constantinople. He had been so long in the house that they could not bear the idea of parting with him. He was appointed in March, 1888, and soon after he took his departure from New York for the scene of his new labors over the city. The sultan gave him a most cordial reception, and it is certain that he made a most favorable impression upon the Turkish court. He closed up many diplomatic tangles, and the relations of the United States and Turkey were never more friendly. At length Mr. Cox weary of the Orient, resigned, came home and early resumed his place in congress. 'I yearned for the society of you gentlemen,' he said in one of his speeches after his return, and the good natured laugh which followed showed that the yearning was not unfounded. His greatest success was to come. Almost alone he extracted his party from an absurd position in regard to the admission of his four strong opponents, Washington and the Dakotas was a continued effort. From December, 1887, to March, 1889, save about six years, he was continuously in congress, and only Judge Kelley and Sam Ragsdale, of Pennsylvania, outranked him in continuous service. His nickname of 'Sunset Cox' may have been given in consequence of his initials, 'S. S.,' but his first application was soon after the publication in his paper, The Statesman, of Columbus, O., May 19, 1853, of a sophomoric description of a sunset, beginning as follows: A GREAT OLD SUNSET. What a beautiful sunset was that of last night! How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun! We do not remember ever to have seen the like on our rural globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating mist, which colored the foliage and lightened every object in its own rich tints. The colors grew deeper and richer until the golden ladder was transformed into a storm cloud, full of flashing lightning, which leaped in dazzling zig-zag all round and over the city. The wind arose with fury, the slender shrubs and giant trees made obedience to its mastery. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus' man and by.

As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder roared grandly, and the lightnings flashed in every direction with hearty chorus. The south and east received the copious showers, and the west all at once brightened up in its long, polished belts of azure, worthy of a Sicilian sky. Presently a cloud appeared in the azure belt, in the form of a castellated mountain, in the distance, revealing strange forms of peerless faces and alabaster temples, and glories rare and grand in this mundane sphere. It reminds us of Wordsworth's splendid verse in his "Excursion":

The appearance instantaneously disclosed Was of a mighty city, bodily airy, A wilderness of buildings, standing far, And self withdrawn into a wondrous depth, Far sinking into splendor without end. Mr. Cox's first speech in congress attracted much attention, and his address late in 1859, when he described a brother congressman as flying from the field of Bull Run, hanging to the tail of a stampeded steed, "like an ancient horse from hunting Troy on the shoulders of Aeneas," made a nation laugh in spite of its sorrow. In this same speech he summed up the Missouri controversy of the time in such excitement and humorous style that it was at once accepted as correct by the public. This was the speech in which he told how Fremont's greatness was blasted by the consuming error of "Blair's Rhetoric" - that being the title of a popular school book of the time. One of his last speeches was on the fisheries and fish conservation, in which he said: "I refer to New England, where I was educated - when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across the sea and settle Massachusetts, the six aged Puritans: 'What is your object? What do you intend?' 'To worship God and catch fish!' [laughter]. 'Then the king rejoined: 'Give you the charter for the fish, and the apostles' own calling.' [Renewed laughter]. 'Why, sir, even in the early churches of New England the early and pious Puritans used to sing: 'Ye monsters of the bubbling deep, Up from the sands, ye codlings, peep, And your tails always [laughter and applause]. So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty and sanctity. In later times New England has obtained its fame as a fishing ground, giving free sale for her fish, while the miserable man in Chicago cannot get free salt for his pork. [laughter]. Congress has been so long in session for the fisherman. For many decades it gave bounties at so much per cod. These bounties have not become less numerous of late years, but the bounty ceased. They are a power in numbers and influence. They number a million or more of men constantly engaged in their hard and hazardous occupation. Their calling is associated at the present time with some curiously wringing in diplomacy. [laughter]. But wherever they are, and wherever they adventure, they should be cared for by the fostering arm of the government. The main object of this bill is to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of food. It would send out the seed broadcast that fish take up in their residence in the city in 1862, 1870 he was re-elected; in 1872 he was beaten for congressman at large. The next election he was elected Democrat in again, and was re-elected again and again till his years of service lacked but little of a quarter of a century. Of his return to congress, the president himself said in his history says: 'It was not possible for Mr. Cox to keep out of the political field. His stamp, his ready wit, and above all his good nature and good sense, commended him to the New York Democrats. He has been a member of industry. In all the pressure of congressional life, to the duties of which he has given assiduous attention, he has devoted much time to literature and has published several original and entertaining books.' The first of these books, 'The Buckeye Abroad,' has often returned to plague the author. In its pages he expressed without reserve and with all the fervor of youth his immature ideas on Catholicism, Ireland, free trade and many other subjects, on which it is scarcely necessary to add, his opinion was not shared by his countrymen. Nevertheless these were his expressions in type, and they have many times been quoted, both in congress and the campaign press. Mr. Cox served as a member of the committee of foreign affairs, for which he was eminently qualified by his experience in diplomacy. His extensive travels in foreign lands and his close study and research. His mind was retentive and vigorous. When in 1888 he was a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives in the legislature of the state of New York, he was better adapted for the position than Mr. Cox, because of his perfect familiarity with the rules and practice of the house. As speaker pro tem, he proved himself an excellent presiding officer, bearing himself with dignity and a measure of force little to be expected from so slight a form. Every Congressman regretted that Mr. Cox was to leave Washington for Constantinople. He had been so long in the house that they could not bear the idea of parting with him. He was appointed in March, 1888, and soon after he took his departure from New York for the scene of his new labors over the city. The sultan gave him a most cordial reception, and it is certain that he made a most favorable impression upon the Turkish court. He closed up many diplomatic tangles, and the relations of the United States and Turkey were never more friendly. At length Mr. Cox weary of the Orient, resigned, came home and early resumed his place in congress. 'I yearned for the society of you gentlemen,' he said in one of his speeches after his return, and the good natured laugh which followed showed that the yearning was not unfounded. His greatest success was to come. Almost alone he extracted his party from an absurd position in regard to the admission of his four strong opponents, Washington and the Dakotas was a continued effort. From December, 1887, to March, 1889, save about six years, he was continuously in congress, and only Judge Kelley and Sam Ragsdale, of Pennsylvania, outranked him in continuous service. His nickname of 'Sunset Cox' may have been given in consequence of his initials, 'S. S.,' but his first application was soon after the publication in his paper, The Statesman, of Columbus, O., May 19, 1853, of a sophomoric description of a sunset, beginning as follows: A GREAT OLD SUNSET. What a beautiful sunset was that of last night! How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun! We do not remember ever to have seen the like on our rural globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating mist, which colored the foliage and lightened every object in its own rich tints. The colors grew deeper and richer until the golden ladder was transformed into a storm cloud, full of flashing lightning, which leaped in dazzling zig-zag all round and over the city. The wind arose with fury, the slender shrubs and giant trees made obedience to its mastery. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus' man and by.

As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder roared grandly, and the lightnings flashed in every direction with hearty chorus. The south and east received the copious showers, and the west all at once brightened up in its long, polished belts of azure, worthy of a Sicilian sky. Presently a cloud appeared in the azure belt, in the form of a castellated mountain, in the distance, revealing strange forms of peerless faces and alabaster temples, and glories rare and grand in this mundane sphere. It reminds us of Wordsworth's splendid verse in his "Excursion":

The appearance instantaneously disclosed Was of a mighty city, bodily airy, A wilderness of buildings, standing far, And self withdrawn into a wondrous depth, Far sinking into splendor without end. Mr. Cox's first speech in congress attracted much attention, and his address late in 1859, when he described a brother congressman as flying from the field of Bull Run, hanging to the tail of a stampeded steed, "like an ancient horse from hunting Troy on the shoulders of Aeneas," made a nation laugh in spite of its sorrow. In this same speech he summed up the Missouri controversy of the time in such excitement and humorous style that it was at once accepted as correct by the public. This was the speech in which he told how Fremont's greatness was blasted by the consuming error of "Blair's Rhetoric" - that being the title of a popular school book of the time. One of his last speeches was on the fisheries and fish conservation, in which he said: "I refer to New England, where I was educated - when our ancestors went to King James for a charter to go across the sea and settle Massachusetts, the six aged Puritans: 'What is your object? What do you intend?' 'To worship God and catch fish!' [laughter]. 'Then the king rejoined: 'Give you the charter for the fish, and the apostles' own calling.' [Renewed laughter]. 'Why, sir, even in the early churches of New England the early and pious Puritans used to sing: 'Ye monsters of the bubbling deep, Up from the sands, ye codlings, peep, And your tails always [laughter and applause]. So that in early New England the cure and care of fish was concomitant with commerce, liberty and sanctity. In later times New England has obtained its fame as a fishing ground, giving free sale for her fish, while the miserable man in Chicago cannot get free salt for his pork. [laughter]. Congress has been so long in session for the fisherman. For many decades it gave bounties at so much per cod. These bounties have not become less numerous of late years, but the bounty ceased. They are a power in numbers and influence. They number a million or more of men constantly engaged in their hard and hazardous occupation. Their calling is associated at the present time with some curiously wringing in diplomacy. [laughter]. But wherever they are, and wherever they adventure, they should be cared for by the fostering arm of the government. The main object of this bill is to assist the fishermen so much as the consumers of food. It would send out the seed broadcast that fish take up in their residence in the city in 1862, 1870 he was re-elected; in 1872 he was beaten for congressman at large. The next election he was elected Democrat in again, and was re-elected again and again till his years of service lacked but little of a quarter of a century. Of his return to congress, the president himself said in his history says: 'It was not possible for Mr. Cox to keep out of the political field. His stamp, his ready wit, and above all his good nature and good sense, commended him to the New York Democrats. He has been a member of industry. In all the pressure of congressional life, to the duties of which he has given assiduous attention, he has devoted much time to literature and has published several original and entertaining books.' The first of these books, 'The Buckeye Abroad,' has often returned to plague the author. In its pages he expressed without reserve and with all the fervor of youth his immature ideas on Catholicism, Ireland, free trade and many other subjects, on which it is scarcely necessary to add, his opinion was not shared by his countrymen. Nevertheless these were his expressions in type, and they have many times been quoted, both in congress and the campaign press. Mr. Cox served as a member of the committee of foreign affairs, for which he was eminently qualified by his experience in diplomacy. His extensive travels in foreign lands and his close study and research. His mind was retentive and vigorous. When in 1888 he was a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives in the legislature of the state of New York, he was better adapted for the position than Mr. Cox, because of his perfect familiarity with the rules and practice of the house. As speaker pro tem, he proved himself an excellent presiding officer, bearing himself with dignity and a measure of force little to be expected from so slight a form. Every Congressman regretted that Mr. Cox was to leave Washington for Constantinople. He had been so long in the house that they could not bear the idea of parting with him. He was appointed in March, 1888, and soon after he took his departure from New York for the scene of his new labors over the city. The sultan gave him a most cordial reception, and it is certain that he made a most favorable impression upon the Turkish court. He closed up many diplomatic tangles, and the relations of the United States and Turkey were never more friendly. At length Mr. Cox weary of the Orient, resigned, came home and early resumed his place in congress. 'I yearned for the society of you gentlemen,' he said in one of his speeches after his return, and the good natured laugh which followed showed that the yearning was not unfounded. His greatest success was to come. Almost alone he extracted his party from an absurd position in regard to the admission of his four strong opponents, Washington and the Dakotas was a continued effort. From December, 1887, to March, 1889, save about six years, he was continuously in congress, and only Judge Kelley and Sam Ragsdale, of Pennsylvania, outranked him in continuous service. His nickname of 'Sunset Cox' may have been given in consequence of his initials, 'S. S.,' but his first application was soon after the publication in his paper, The Statesman, of Columbus, O., May 19, 1853, of a sophomoric description of a sunset, beginning as follows: A GREAT OLD SUNSET. What a beautiful sunset was that of last night! How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun! We do not remember ever to have seen the like on our rural globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating mist, which colored the foliage and lightened every object in its own rich tints. The colors grew deeper and richer until the golden ladder was transformed into a storm cloud, full of flashing lightning, which leaped in dazzling zig-zag all round and over the city. The wind arose with fury, the slender shrubs and giant trees made obedience to its mastery. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus' man and by.

As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder ro