A Rash Knight.

Mr. Rueben Knight, of Morris, Man., states that he was troubled with a rash all over his body which was cured with less than one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters. He highly recommends it as a blood puritier of the greatest efficacy.

The September number of the New England Magazine will contain an article by W. Blackburn Harte, dealing with the literary leaders of Canada, Besides this article the number will contain poems by Campbell and Lampman.

(Concluded.) THE GOOD LITTLE GIRL.

Priscilla thoroughly enjoyed the first few days of her visit: even her aunt was only too grateful for instruction, and begged that Priscilla would tell her, quite candidly, of any shortcomings she might notice. And Priscilla, very kindly and considerably, always did tell her. Belle and Catherine were less docile, and she saw that i would take her some time to win their esteem and affection; but this was just what Priscilla liked-it was the usual experience of the heroines in the books, and much more interesting, too, than conquering her cousins' hearts at once. Still, both Catherine and Belle persistently hardened their hearts against their gentle little cousin in the unkindest way; they would scarcely speak to her, and chose to make a grievance out of the fact that one or other of them was obliged, by their mother's strict orders, to be constantly in attendence upon her, in order to pick up and bring Mrs. Hoyle all the jewels that that Priscilla scattered in profusion wherever she went. 'If you would only carry a plate about with you, Priscilla,' complained Belle one day, 'you could catch the jewels in that.'

'But I don't want to catch the jewels dear Belle,' said Priscilla, with a playful but very sweet smile; "if other people prize such things, that is not my fault, is it? Jewels do not make people any happier, Belle.' 'I should think not!' exclaimed Belle; 'I'm sure my back perfectly aches with stopping, and so does Cathie's. There! that big topaz has just gone and rolled under the sideboard, and mother will be so angry if 1 don't get it out. It is too bad of you, Priscilla. I believe you do it on pui-'Ah, you will know me better some the pearls for me.' day, dear,' was the gentle response. 'Well, at all events, I think you might be naughty just now and then,

'I would do anything else to please you, dear, but not that; you must not ask me to do what is impossible.'

Alas! not even this angelic behavior, not even the loving admonitions, the tender rebukes, the shocked reproaches that fell, accompanied by perfect cascades of jewels, from the lips of our pattern little Priscilla, succeeded in removing the utterly unfounded prejudices of her cousins, though it was some consolation to feel that she was gradually acquiring a most beneficial influence over her aunt, who called Priscilla 'her little conscience.' For, you see, Priscilla's conscience had so little to do on her own account that it was always at the service of other people, and, indeed, quite enjoyed being useful, as was only natural to a conscientious conscience, which felt that it could never have been created

Very soon another responsibility was added to little Priscilla's burdens. Her consin Dick-the wordly one with the yellow boots-came home after his annual holiday, which, as he was the junior clerk in a large bank, he was obiiged to take rather late in the year. She had looked forward to his return with some excitement. Dick, knew, was frivolous and reckless in his do with it. 'You're wonderful, Prissie,' he said; 'I'd no idea you had it in you!'

'Nor had I, Dick; but it shows that 'I should rather think so! And the way you look, as grave as a judge all life. He had promised to think over the time. Prissie, I wish you'd tell me how you manage it. I wouldn't tell a

'But I don't know, Dick. I only talk, and the jewels come-that is all. 'You artfu! little girl! You can keep a secret, I see, but so can I. And you might tell me how you do the trick. What put you up to the dodge? I'm to be trusted, I assure you.'.

there is any trickery about it! How can you believe I could be such a wicked little girl as to play tricks? It was an old fairy that gave me the gift. I'm sure I don't know why-unless she thought that I was a good child and deserved to be encouraged.' 'By Jove!' cried Dick. 'I never
