up for six months, and kill as many bears, and open up as many Indian mounds, as you like; only come, and that at your earliest." And now I had come, and I had come five hundred miles out of my way to see him. He knew that I was approaching, but how or when I should arrive he knew not.

I made my way to the village, carrying with me the bear's ears in token of ownership, and was causing about for some sign of an inn, when my eyes caught sight of this legend, painted in large white letters on a black ground, "Donald Phinister: Groceries and Dry Goods." No my friend, it seemed, was a grocer and dry-goodsman, with sugars on one side of the store and calicoes on the other, in true Western style. I think I felt a bit sorry that it was so; but I called to mind the image of the man, and told myself that it did not matter to me a red cent what his business was. Just as I reached the store a young man came out and deposited a roll of carpet on the wooden sidewalk.

"Is Mr. Phinister within?" I enquired. The young man stuck a thumbstick in his mouth, and took a long, steady look at me and my horse, before he said, "Guess you don't belong to these parts, stranger, from the look of you." I assented. "Britisher, ain't you?" Again I assented. "Come on business?" Once more I assented. "What may yer line be—dry goods?" "No, wet." "Wet?" "Yes, wet. They are having a boom just now on the Eastern markets. Dry goods are nowhere beside them." I answered gravely. "Darned if I can catch on. Give it up, stranger; never heeded of the articles before." "All right; I don't object, my friend. But, say, is Mr. Phinister within?" "No, he ain't. Guess the boss is at home." "And where is that, pray?" The young man turned, and pointing down the short street towards the lake said, "Do you see that young lady there in white, going towards the water?" "With a crimson sunshade?" "Yes, that's her. Just follow after her, and she'll take you right to Donald Phinister's. But, mister, I ain't at all clear yet about them wet goods." I heard him say, as I cantered off after the lady in white. She was lost to view almost as soon as I started, and when I reached the end of the street, I was just in time to see her give her first stroke, as she was seated in a small light canoe on the lake. I galloped after her waving my hand; when she saw me, she turned her boat round and came back. "I was told that if I followed you, you would lead me to Mr. Donald Phinister's. But I don't quite see how I can do it on horseback," I said, as she came gliding up to the pretty little landing-stage. "No, sir, I guess it's too far to swim. Are you the 'colonel'?" she asked, with just the faintest of blushes over-spreading her pure, colorless face. She was a pretty girl, cultivated and ladylike. "Yes, I am—at least Mr. Phinister always calls me such; though, of course, I have no right to any such title." "Oh, that doesn't matter. I am so glad you have come, and won't uncle be glad! Here, Robert Mackenzie, take this gentleman's horse to the stable, and look after it well," she called out, with an air of pretty command. A sandy-haired young Scotsman came forward from a group of onlookers, and took my horse. "Have you any baggage, sir?" she enquired. "Yes, lots of it, but it is in St. Louis." "Ah, then it can't come across to-day, as it is a good thousand miles off." "You see, I have been in the woods nearly a week, and I had to reduce my traps to the smallest compass. They are all there," I said, pointing to one or two ingeniously packed bundles back and front of the saddle. "Bring everything across at once, Rob. I had better take the gentleman's rifle, too." "I forgot to say that I left some of my baggage about a mile from here, on a hillcock yonder. It is in the form of a dead bear, which I wish you would look after for me," I observed to Rob, as I handed him my rifle. "On Hickory Mount? Ye dinna say ye've gone and shot the big bear, sir?" exclaimed Rob, in a tone, as I thought, of some disgust. "I'm afraid I have. Was he one of the pets round here?" I asked. "You bet, sir. He was worth three hundred dollars of any man's money. He's been one too many for all of us. No end of money has been won and lost on that varmint during 't' last five year. I'd very well like to hear how ye did it, sir." "Rob, get about your business, and don't keep the gentleman standing here all day," came in sweet tones of authority from the boat. "Some other time," I said to comfort him, as I turned away and entered the canoe. Of course, I volunteered to do the pulling, but my lady of the lake only smiled and shook her head. When I offered to steer, she shook her head again, and laughed right out. At another time I should have thought her laughter was melodious. "You row first-rate, but that is no reason why you should tire yourself—I really shouldn't upset you," I answered, for her merry laugh was equal to a good many words. "I guess you would, sir, in two minutes. This is a very curious piece of water, and dangerous for strangers. I bent over to the left, and there, a few inches from the surface, was a long, sharp blade of rock. The girl gave two or three swift strokes, then she said, "Now look here." I bent over to the right, and under my eyes was a series of six or seven teeth of ugly rock. "It is so half the way across," she remarked, as she settled to work, and sent the skiff rushing through the water in grand style. After that I sat thinking, holding my breath, wondering at her skill and nerve. The old Indian pilot at the La Chaine rapids was a duffer compared with her. Presently my attention was drawn to the waving of what looked like a small flag, by some one on the top of a lofty, towerlike structure on the island. "Ah, that's uncle," exclaimed the girl. "He is signalling to me from his observatory." Thereupon she ceased rowing, and pulling from her pocket a couple of handkerchiefs, one red and the other white, she began to flag-signal in a rapid manner. In a little while she said, with a pretty laugh, "There, he knows all about you now. I am to tell you that you are as welcome as a king. I guess he has set the telephones at work by this." The words were scarcely off her tongue, when suddenly the quiet air was rent with the loud booming of three cannons that were discharged in quick succession. "They have been loaded a week, awaiting your arrival," laughed the girl, enjoying my astonishment, which was not unmixed with alarm. "It's very kind of your uncle, but—" Up went the lady's finger, and, at the same moment, there came a crash of melodious sound that almost brought the tears to my eyes. It was nothing less than the peal of sweet-toned bells that might, for all

A Newspaper Directory for Canada.

MESSRS. A. McKim & Co., Advertising Agents of Montreal, are preparing what will be the first comprehensive newspaper directory of this country.

Canada is now quite large enough and its journalistic interests of sufficient importance to require its own annual Newspaper Directory, and there are several new features of the proposed work which will make it a valuable hand-book for all seeking information concerning the Canadian Press.

We bespeak for this enterprising firm, the hearty support and co-operation of Canadian publishers generally.

Mothers!

Castoria is recommended by physicians for children teething. It is a purely vegetable preparation, its ingredients are published under each bottle. It is pleasant to the taste and absolutely harmless. It relieves constipation, regulates the bowels, quiets pain, cures diarrhoea and wind colic, allays feverishness, destroys worms, and prevents convulsions, soothes the child and gives it refreshing sleep. Castoria is the children's panacea—the mother's friend, 35 doses, 35 cents.

STANLEY'S GREAT BOOK.

"In Darkest Africa."

Having accepted the agency of the above work for the County of Northumberland, I beg to state that it is sold only by me and is the latest book written by Stanley and the original and genuine one which certain dishonest publishers are endeavoring to imitate and deceive the public with. It is published by Charles Scribner's Sons and will be sent in July through the Early Publishing House of St. John, who are the general agents for the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland.

The public are especially warned against spurious Stanley books, as called, now being offered to purchasers and declared by the vendors to be the work of that famous explorer.

Any one wishing to see a sample copy of the book may do so by sending me a postal card notice to that effect.
