[Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, and published by special arrangement with them.]

It was a clear winter's evening, sharply cold, about a week after the fire, when, as Mrs. Rayner came down the stairway, equipped for a walk, and was passing the parlor door without stopping, Miss Travers caught sight of and called to

"You shall not go!"

"Are you going walking, Kate? Do wait a moment, and I'll go with you." Any one in the hall could have shared the author's privilege and seen the expression of annoyance and confusion that appeared on Mrs. Rayner's face. "I thought you were out. Did not Mr. Graham take you walking?"

"He did; but we wandered into Mrs.

Waldron's, and she and the major begged us to stay, and we had some music, and then the first call sounded for retreat and Mr. Graham had to go, so he brought me home. I've had no walk and need exer-"But I don't like you to be out after sunset. That cough of yours"-

"Disappeared the day after I got here, Kate, and there hasn't been a vestige of it since. This high, dry climate put an end to it. No, I'll be ready in one minute more. Do wait." Mrs. Rayner's hand was turning the knob while her sister was hurrying to the front door and drawing on her heavy jacket as she did so. The former faced her impatiently: "I don't think you are at all courteous to your visitors. You know just as well as I do that Mr. Foster or Mr. Royce or

Then I'll take you." "So do I want to make a short callover at the doctor's; and you are going right to the hospital, are you not?"

"How do you know I am?" asked Mrs. Rayner, reddening. "You do go there every evening, it "I don't. Who told you I did?"

"Several people mentioned your kindness and attention to the Clancys, Kate. I have heard it from many sources." "I wish people would mind their own affairs," wailed Mrs. Rayner, peevishly. "So do I, Kate; but they never have, and never will, especially with an engaged girl. I have more to complain of than you, but it doesn't make me forlorn, whereas you look fearfully worried

It was the soldier telegraph operator with a dispatch envelope in his hand. "It is for Mrs. Rayner, miss, and an answer is expected. Shall I wait?" Mrs. Ravner came hastily forward from her place of refuge within the dining room, took the envelope without a word and passed into the parlor, where, standing beneath the lamp, she tore it open, glanced anxiously at its contents, then threw it with an exclamation of peevish indignation upon the table.

"You'll have to answer for yourself, Nellie. I cannot straighten your affairs and mine too." And with that she was going, but Miss Travers called her back.
