FROM THE DIARY OF A LAWYER AND THE NOTE BOOK OF A REPORTER. By BARCLAY NORTH.

[Continued] The clerk was very chatty. As he laid out the suits he said: "We laughed when the 'boss' bought all there was of this cloth in the market, and thought he would make a mess of it; but he knew what he was about, after all." "Evidently," said Tom, encouragingly. "Let me get your waist measure. Yes, these pants will fit you. The very first day we got them on the counter your committee came in, looked over the humors by using Burdock Bood Bitters, stock and lit on this lot. 'They'll be just the thing for our clam bake,' said

> "Oh, it's a clam bake I am going on, is it?" thought Tom. "Let me take your chest measure. Here's the coat. You will have a fine day to-morrow from the looks of today." Tom assented. "They gave an order for a hundred suits right down. Since then twenty-eight have come in. You make the twentyninth. I suppose there'll be more in before we close to-night—that is, if you have got more than one hundred and twenty-nine members. We will work the stock off pretty well."

Tom now had a basis for proceeding and tried to stop the flow of talk. "Have you sold the same clothes to any one else?"

"Just one suit that I know didn't belong to the U.S. T.'s." Tom brightened up. "We ought to get on to him and make im go with us."

"That's what you ought to do."

"Can you recollect the sort of fellow "Well, sir, that's pretty hard to do." "By thunder! I'll bet I know who it is. Tall fellow, slim, dark haired, dark eyes, handsome, swellish-kind o'a dudish fellow."

"Yes, by thunder! That's just like his pranks. See here, did he get a suit a size too large for him and didn't buy the "Well, no, I can't recollect that, and I don't think-I know we sold a vest with every suit. You see it would cost the same whether they took the vest or not. "If he was up to the game I think he was, it wouldn't make any difference about the price. I say, would you recollect his face if you saw a photograph "I think it likely, sir."

"What day did you sell it to him, can you recollect?" "I can tell by looking at the sales slips; I always keep the slips." "Do, please."

The clerk went off and returned with handful of papers. Looking them over he finally extracted one. "It was on the 12th, in the afternoon," "Five days before the murder." thought Tom. Aloud he said: "Thank you. I am on to him. Please send these clothes to No. 1,100 East Thirty-first street. I'll pay you for them now." "This is such a good day's work," said he, when out on the street, "I think I will dine well and at the expense of the cessary to specify, a row of old fashioned two story brick houses. In one of these houses, on the morning following the day Holbrook had been surprised by his three widely separated visitors bent on the same errand, there occurred a scene which greatly excited the interest, no less than the curiosity, of the Shadow, who occupied the back room of the second floor of the house in question. On this particular morning, because he had been out the greater part of the previous night, and because Tom had informed him that he would not require his services until the afternoon, he had slept late. The occupant of the adjoining room, that is to say, the front room, was an old man, nearly if not quite seventy years old. Who he was, or what his belongings were, had long since ceased to quality Unland Hay (same as I sold tons of last winter) which I will sell cheap 16 archouse or by the Car along the lines of cit. the I. C borhood. He was accepted as a fact of borhood. He was accepted as a fact of the locality, just as the corner grocery and the hydrant were. He was rarely quite sober, and when he was, it was early in the morning before he had had time to make an early visit to the rum mill of which he was the most frequent customer. It had become a settled fact that he was a man of property, for he had always enough money to buy drink and pay his board bill. From time to time he sallied forth from the street, and when he returned it was known that he was flush, and so the neighborhood had come to believe implicitly that these occasional excursions were for the purpose of collecting his rents and receiving

From his life long habit of spying on people, the Shadow had kept an eye on Between the front and back rooms there was a space divided into closets. One was entered through a door from the front room and the other from the The Shadow had long ago discovered that there had been, once upon a time, an opening in the partition which divided the closets, doubtless for the purpose of ventilation. When the closets had been papered this opening had been covered up. By standing on his trunk in the closet he could bring his head on a level with this opening, concealed only by the thin CHATHAM, - - N. B. paper. If the door between the front room and the closet were open anything said in an ordinary tone of voice could be distinctly heard.

The Shadow had broken a hole into the wall which separated the front room from his closet, on his side. And once, when the opportunity had presented

He saw the occupant of the room sitting with his back to him at a table in the center, while on the opposite side was George Parker, the attorney. "Ah," said the Shadow, "here's mischief. I never knew that old scamp of

He climbed to the top of the trunk and listened. All he heard for a moment was the scratching of a pen as it was driven rapidly over paper.

Finally he heard Parker's voice. "Now see here, Preston, I have carefully written this story down, and you | yard. must familiarize yourself with it." "How much is true and how much "It doesn't make any difference how much is true or false; this story" (slapping the papers) "has got to be the true one. Now, I want you to study over it, and I will come again and again and talk with you until you get it pat." "Well, I'll try it." "If you would stop drinking and get the rum out of your sodden old brain you would get it all right enough. You used to be sharp enough, in all conscience "Am as sharp now as I ever was, only I can't recollect as I used to. That's because I'm getting old." "It's because you are getting your skin full of whisky every day. Now, see here. You are a brother of Charles Preston.' "Of course I am, or why did he give me money for fifteen years?" "What's the use of our arguing that "Well, that does kind o' answer to point? It makes no difference between us whether it was because you were his brother, which he denied, or because you had a secret of his worth paying for. For all we want, you are." "Well, I was, I tell you."

"Never mind; we can establish, by putting your papers and my papers together, that Charles Pierson was an assumed name; the reason why he changed it: that you were his brother; that he had no relations other than you, and no descendants; and establishing these facts In Store--30 Barrels White Beans. we can take his property. "Oh, I'll get it, don't you fear." "Well, I do fear. Then there is the story of your own life, I have written Parker laughed an ugly laugh.

"It was a tough job to reconstruct the twenty years of your life you spent between four stone walls." "Hush," said the other old man, "for heaven's sake don't talk of that." "Well, you served your time out; they can't take you for it again. It was a rocky path that of your life, old man, and I have smoothed it very ingeniously." "Keep quiet!" cried the old man, with an oath, "or I'll kick the whole thing overboard."

This threat had a subduing effect upon Parker. "Well, don't get huffy," he said; "I'll . be quiet. But you must be pat with it when you're called upon for it. I don't think you will be, for I doubt if there will be a contestant. But the lawyer whom I shall employ may want to know

In a moment more the person entered "You are a notary public; I want you to verify these signatures." It was a ceremony soon accomplished and Parker, placing the papers in his

The Shadow remained long enough at his post to hear Preston say: "Well, there's something crooked about this, but I don't know what.
