GENERAL NEWS AND NOTES

Burdock Blood Bitters
A large portion of Milford, Utah, has been burned. Loss $45,000.

Everyone Should Try
To secure good health. The great specific for all diseases arising from disordered stomach, such as overflow of bile, sick headache, loss of appetite, nausea, palpitation, indigestion, constipation and all blood diseases, is Burdock Blood Bitters. Hundreds of people owe their health to B. B. B., nature's regulator and tonic.

SKIN
Heavy rains have fallen throughout Kootenai and materially benefited the crops.

A Boom to Mankind.
The quickest, surest and best remedy for rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, sore throat, soreness and lameness, is Hagar's Yellow Oil. It quickly cures sprains, bruises, burns, frostbites, chilblains, etc. For cramp, colic, quinsy, etc., take 10 to 30 drops on sugar, and apply the oil externally also, when immediate relief will result.

SCROFULA
The pilgrim, who has visited the Pope recently, has carried to his holiness about $20,000.

Well Adapted.
The effective action on the glandular system and the blood and the general regulating and purifying action of B. B. B., especially adapted it for the bilious, nervous, costive or scrofulous. From 3 to 6 bottles will cure all blood diseases from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous sore.

Princess Louise, wife of Crown Prince Frederick of Denmark, has given birth to a daughter.

The National Bank of Ottawa, N. Y., has suspended, but it is said depositors will be paid in full.

The Duke of Connaught and party enjoyed great delight with the scenery passed on their trip eastward last Friday.

Lame Back Cured.
SEVEN years ago I was troubled with lame back and could scarcely move. Several remedies failed, but on trying Hagar's Yellow Oil I found immediate relief, and two bottles, effected a complete cure.

A Wonderful Fish Producer.
This is the title given to Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil by many thousands who have taken it. It not only gives flesh and strength by virtue of its own nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food. Use it, and try your weight. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable. THE DESERTER.
[Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, as published by special arrangement with this.]

There was one man in Garrison whom Hayne had known, and for whom he felt one of the faintest sympathies; and that, of course, was Buxton. With Rayner gone, he hardly had an associate, though the esprit de corps of the—th prompted the cavalry officers to be civil to him when he appeared at the billiard room.

As Mr. Hurley was fond of the game, an element of awkwardness was manifested with their engineer friend. Hayne had not set foot in such a place for five years, and quietly declined all invitations to take a set again. It was remembered of him that he played the prettiest game of French carroms of all the officers at the station when he joined the Riflers as a boy. Hurley could only say a very short time ago that the Riflers were doing their best to make it lively for him. Some, indeed, showed strong inclination to devote themselves to Mrs. Hurley; but she was too busy with her brother's household affairs to detect their projects.

Hayne had turned a very red and glared at Buxton the first time the two met at the club room, but the bulky captain specially found cover under which to retire, and never again showed himself in general society until the engineer with the scientific attainments as a boxer as well as road builder was safely out of the post.

And yet there came a day very soon when Mr. Hayne wished that he could go to Buxton's quarters. He had in no wise changed his opinion of the man himself, but he had been come a fortnight before Mrs. Buxton began to tell the ladies of the charming letters she was receiving from Mrs. Rayner—all about their travels. There were many things he longed to know, yet could not ask.

The captain had a long and sorrowful letter from the captain himself, in full before Mrs. Buxton began to tell beyond a few matters relating to the company and the transfer of its property, it was all given up to a recapitulation of the troubles of the past few years and to renewed expressions of his deep regret. "If it had not been for me," he said, "I would have been a lieutenant."

The one thing lacking to complete the chain is Gower," said the major, as he looked up over his spectacles. "It would be difficult to tell what became of him. We got tidings of most of the deserters who were as prominent among the men as he appears to have been; but I have made inquiry, and so has the colonel, and not a word has ever been heard of him since the night he appeared before Mrs. Clancy and handed over the money to her. He was a strange character, from all accounts, and must have had some conscience after all. Do you remember him at all, Hayne?"

"I remember him well. We made the march from the Big Horn over to Battle Butte together, and he was a soldier one never had anything to say to him, but we heard he was an expert gambler when the troop was over there at Miners' Delight."

"Of course his testimony isn't necessary. Clancy and his wife between them have cleared you, after burying you alive five years. But nothing but his story could explain his singular conduct—planning the whole of your execution with all the skill of a professional jailbird, deserting and covering several hundred miles with his plunder, then daring to go to the old fort, find Mrs. Clancy, and surrender every cent the moment he heard of your trial. He was a fiend that woman was! No wonder she drove Clancy to drink!"

"Will you send copies of her admission with Clancy's affidavits?" asked Hayne.

"Here they are in full," answered the major, and he handed a bundle of papers, then printed and stored broadcast as warnings against "snap judgment" and too confident testimony in future."

Divested of the legal encumbrances with which such documents are usually weighted, Clancy's story ran substantially as follows:

"I was sergeant in K troop, and Gower was in F. We had been stationed together six months or so when ordered out on the Indian campaign that summer. I was dead broke. All my money was gone, and my wife kept bothering me for more. I owed a lot of money around headquarters, too, and Gower knew it, and sometimes asked me what I was going to do when we got back from the campaign. We were not good friends, him and I. There was money dealings between us, and then there was talk about Mrs. Clancy finding him too much. The paymaster came up with a strong escort and paid off the boys late in October, just as the expedition was breaking up and going home, and all the officers were to get their four months' pay. There was Lieut. Crane and twenty men of F troop out on a scout, but the lieutenant had left his pay rolls with Capt. Hull, and the men had all signed before they started, and so the captain drew it all for them and put each man's money in an envelope marked with his name and the lieutenant's too, and then crowded it all into some bigger envelope. I was there where I could see it all, and Gower was watching him close. It's a big pile the captain's got," says he. "I'd like to be a road agent and nab him." When I told him it couldn't be over eleven hundred dollars, he says, "That's only part. He has his own pay and six hundred dollars company fund, and a word of greenbacks he's been carrying around all summer. It's high on to four thousand dollars he's got in his saddle bags this day."

"And that night, instead of Lieut. Crane's coming back, he sent word he had found the trail of a big band of Indians, and the whole crowd went in pursuit. There was four companies of infantry, under Capt. Rayner, and F and K troops—what was left of them—that were ordered to stay by the wagons and bring them safely down; and we started with them over towards Battle Butte, keeping south of the way the regiment had gone to follow Mr. Crane. And the very next day Capt. Rayner got orders to bring his battalion to the river and get on the boat, while the wagons kept on down the bank with us to guard them. And Mr. Hayne was acting quartermaster, and he stayed with us; and him and Capt. Hull was together a good deal. There was some trouble, we heard, because Capt. Rayner thought another officer should have been made quartermaster in his company, and they had some words; but Capt. Hull gave Mr. Hayne a horse and seemed to keep him with him; and that night, in sight of Battle Butte, the steam boat was out of sight ahead where we went into camp, and I was sergeant of the guard and had my fire near the captain's tent, and twice in the evening Gower came to me and said now was the time to lay hands on the money and skip. At last he says to me, "You are flat broke, and it'll all be down on you when you get back to the post. No man in America wants five hundred dollars more than you do. I'll give you five hundred in one hour from now if you'll not let almost everybody tent for half an hour. Almost everybody was asleep then; the captain was, and so was Mr. Hayne, and he went on to tell me how he could do it. He'd been watching the captain. It made such a big bundle, did the money, in all the separate envelopes that he had done it all up different—made a memorandum of the amount due each man, and packed the greenbacks all together in one solid pile—his own money, the lieutenant's and the men's—done it up in paper and tied it first, and put big blocks of green sealing wax on it and sealed them with the seal on his watch chain. Says Gower, "You get the captain out, as I tell you, and I'll slip right in, get the money, stuff some other paper with a few ones and twos, and make it look like his watch and everything in his saddle bags under his head, and I can replace it in five minutes, and he'll never suspect the loss until the command all gets together again next week. By that time I'll be three hundred miles away. Ever since you saw Gower that robbed him, and you with your five hundred will never be suspected." I asked him how could he expect the captain to go and leave so much money in his bags with no one to guard it; and he said he'd let it be his own risk. The captain had had no luck tracking Indians that summer, and the regiment was laughing at him. He knew they were scattering every which way now, and was eager to strike them. All I had to do was to creep in, scolded like, walk him up sudden, and tell him I was sure I had heard an Indian drum and their scalp dance song out beyond the pickets—that they were over towards Battle Butte, and he could hear them if he would come out on the river bank. "He'd go quick," says Gower, "and think of nothing!"

"And—I wouldn't believe it, but he did. He sprang up and went right out with me, just flinging his overcoat round him; and he never seemed to want to come in. The wind was blowing soft like from the southeast, and he stood there straining his ears trying to hear the sounds I told him of; but at last he gave it up, and we went back to camp, and he took his lantern and looked in his saddle bags, and I shook for fear; but he seemed to find everything all right, and in the next ten minutes he was asleep, and Gower came and whispered to me, and I went with him, and he gave me five hundred dollars, in two or three bundles, says he: 'Get the sentries off while you get my horse.' And that's the last I ever saw of him. Then a strange thing happened. 'Twas hardly daylight when a courier came galloping up, and I called the captain and he read the dispatch, and says he, 'By heaven, Clancy, you were right after all. There are Indians over there. Why didn't I trust your ears?' Call up the whole command. The Riflers have treed them at Battle Butte, and Capt. Rayner has gone with his battalion. I volunteered to escort the wagons to where the boat lies beyond the bend, and then push over with all the horsemen we can take."

"It was after daylight when we got started, but we almost ran the wagon 'cross country to the boat, and there Capt. Hull took F troop and what there was of his own, leaving only ten men back with the wagons, and not till then was Gower missed; but all were in such a hurry to get to the Indians that no one paid attention to him. He begged the captain to let him go, too, so the train was left with the wagon master and the captain of the boat, and away we went. You know all about the fight, and how 'twas Mr. Hayne the captain called to and said he'd wash and the two packages of money when he was ordered to charge. I was right by his side, and I swore—God forgive me!—that through the crack and tear in the paper I could see the lawyer's greenbacks, when I knew 'twas only some ones and twos Gower had slipped in to make it look right; and Capt. Rayner stood there and saw the packet, too, and Sergt. Walshe and Bugler White; but them two were killed with him, so that 'twas only Capt. Rayner and I was left as witnesses, and never till we got to Laramie after the campaign did the trouble come. I never dreamed of anything ever coming of it but that every one would say Gower stole the money and deserted; but when the captain turned the packages over to Mr. Hayne and then got killed, and Mr. Hayne carried the packages, with the watch, seal, saddle bags and all, to Cheyenne, and never opened them till he got there—two weeks after, when we were all scattered, and they turned on him, I saw officers drill and said he stole and gambled or sent it away in Cheyenne."

"I had lost much of my money then, and Mrs. Clancy got the rest, and it made me crazy to think of that poor young gentleman accused of it all; but I was in for it, and knew it meant prison for years for me, and perhaps they couldn't prove it on him. I got to drinking then, and told Capt. Rayner that the—th was down on me for sending away the young officer's character; and then he took me to Company B when the colonel wouldn't have me any more in the—th; and one night when Mrs. Clancy had been raising my hair and I wanted money to drink and she'd give me a little Kate told me her mother had lots of money in a box, and that Sergt. Gower had come and given it to her while they were getting settled in the new post after the Battle Butte campaign, and he had made me promise to give it to me the moment I got back—that somebody was in the stable, and that I must save him; and I believed Kate, and charged Mrs. Clancy with it, and she beat me and Kate, and swore it was all a lie; and I never could get the money."

"And at last came the fire, and it was the lieutenant that saved my life and Kate's, and brought back to her all that pile of money through the flames. It broke my heart then, and I vowed I'd go and tell him the truth, but they wouldn't let me. She told me the captain said he would kill me if I blabbed, and she would kill Kate. I didn't dare, and they told me my discharge had come, and then I was glad when the lieutenant and the major caught me in town. When
