MR. TURNER WILSON.—The Toronto Merchant says:—"An increase in public patronage, particularly in most of the professions, is a pretty good indication that the man who is thus favored is a success. And judging from this, Mr. P. Turner Wilson, auditor and accountant, Toronto street, this city, may be said to have secured the desideratum. He is a first-class practical book-keeper and accountant, and is therefore eminently qualified for the examination or superintending of merchant's books who have not time to overlook their book-keeper's work. And although he makes this class of work a specialty, all pertaining to a professional accountant's duties receives a large share of his attention."

ENTERTAINMENT.—A large audience greeted the entertainment held by the members of the St. Michael's C. T. A. Society, in aid of the Hotel Dieu, in Masonic Hall, on Thursday evening last. The Irish Drama, "Pike O'Callaghan," was repeated and rendered in good shape. Mr. Maher's singing was good and Mr. Sheridan, who is always popular, was received with loud applause upon each appearance he made. His singing and character sketches were excellent. The two selected sponsors, Messrs. Louzier and Dunn, performed the parts well and were applauded. The cornet solo by Mr. W. Gould was very fine and called forth applause. He showed himself to be a master of the cornet. Mr. Cripps' singing was also well received. The selection by the band was particularly fine and the "Faro," "The Demijohn," was full of fun and received loud applause. The orchestral music, led by Mr. McEachern was something we have not often the pleasure of listening to. The band played some admirable selections on the street on the evening of the entertainment, showing that the organization is making rapid progress. A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered last Sunday evening at the Society meeting to Mr. W. Gould for valuable assistance given to the last entertainment, and also to Mr. A. Patterson for valuable services he gave at St. Patrick's evening entertainment.

Unannounced Attack upon a Superior. BARTIBO, April 12th, 1890. Editor of the Advance, Chatham. Sir:—The editor of the World endeavored on Wednesday last, to make people believe that I had not properly accounted for the public money in my hands as supervisor of the great road from Chatham Ferry to Tabasistac. He states that he has been looking into this year's report for my bridge-building vouchers without success, and blames his failure upon me. He does not seem to be much of a success in anything he undertakes, excepting as a general fanfaronade. I beg to say that I am not accountable for his want of success in regard to giving an honest statement of my accounts with the public any more than I am for his failure to conduct a paper creditably in Chatham. If he wished to treat me honestly, instead of being the instrument of my few enemies, why did he refer to only a part of my account, as published in one place in the Public Works Report, and ignore the general account published in another part? He omits enough to give the color of truth to his statement that I have spent only $98 in bridge building, and proceeds to publish his own imaginings of what respectable people think of his alleged discoveries.

If he will turn to page 42, part B of the Public Works Report, he will find the following:— John Connell, Supervisor. New Bridges. Ekedeked, pine and cedar built in 1888.....$118 00 Gordon Brook cedar do..... 56 00 $174 00

Bridge Repairs in 1888. Tabasistac, black plank.....$73 00 Bartiboo, ballast plank..... 46 00 119 00 $293 00

If he will add my commission to the above amount it will be $317.90, which any honest man will admit is very near the $318.00 complained of by his friend last year. He is, perhaps, not to blame for not knowing better than to write against me at the instigation of persons who would not be treated by a properly qualified editor, but he is very much to be censured for withholding my justification, which was before him in the Public Works Report.

Respectfully yours, JOHN CONNELL, Supervisor.

[Mr. Connell pays more attention to the chronic fanfaronade referred to than he merits. People hereabouts have very little confidence in anything that the local print publishes, although it is evident that either ignorantly or maliciously ignored the clear showing made by the Public Works Report of Mr. Connell's Bridge expenditures. If it was not intentionally done the writer cannot claim much credit for his intelligence after watching as long as he indicates he has done for the account to appear. It is such men that trouble in every community a mission which seems theirs by design of their nature and the malevolence of the community's evil genius.]

Woman's Influence in its Relations to the Temperance Cause. STILL ANOTHER GRAND DISPLAY OF WHAT THEY HAVE DONE, AND WHAT THEY CAN DO WITH REGARD TO TEMPERANCE.

A LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIAL UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE W. T. C. UNION. CROWDED HALL. ITS EFFECTS ON THE PRESENT TEMPERANCE AGITATION. Hardly had the curtain dropped down over the W. T. C. Union's entertainment in Chatham, on the occasion of their first anniversary, than the Newcastle Lodge of Good Templars were, in their turn with a similar celebration, and now it is the W. T. C. Union of the shiretown who claim a passing notice from our pen, a task which we accept with the more pleasure that it is for our most welcome opportunity again offered us of contributing, to the fullest extent of our small resources, in the common tribute of gratitude tendered them (through our unworthy hands, though it be) by the community for their social in Newcastle, which, to say the least, was a splendid affair, everyone pronouncing it to be one of the most enjoyable gatherings of the kind ever gotten up in Newcastle, enhanced as it was by the musical and oratorical talent of the town, which largely contributed to the success of the entertainment.

If numbers count for anything in a social, we infer from the large crowd gathered at the hall, that the public expectation, and in their expectations they were not disappointed. The entertainment fully realized them in the variety of the programme, the high tone of the addresses, and the exquisite melody of the singing and music. The following programme, although an elaborate one, was admirably carried out, to the great delight of an enthusiastic audience who, collectively, found it none too long:— Introductory Address by Mr. Clark; Instrumental music by Miss Rundle and Messrs. Stewart and Williamson; Quartette—Dead March. Recitation—A Leap for Life—by Master J. Stables (well done). Solo by Miss Frances Elliott. This solo lady, we are told, is a splendid singer, and deserves special mention here. Oh that we could only have heard her! "Singing hath charms to soothe the savage heart," as the poet would say.

Next was Instrumental Music by the former performers—Miss Rundle and Messrs. Stewart and Williamson; and followed—a recitation—Mama's Story—by Miss Lottie Troy; Solo and Chorus with music accompaniment by Mrs. B. Thomson & Company. Recitation by Master Willie Johnson (good! Willie.) Duet—Miss Mary and Mr. John Russell; Instrumental Music by Messrs. Stewart and Williamson; Recitation by Miss Bessie Bill; Solo by Mr. B. Thomson.

Recitation—Sister Madeleine—by Miss Harley; Solo—Look along on the Sunny Side—by Mrs. Sutherland, (sung with great effect.) Recitation by Miss Ethel Elliott, Now came what we would fancy to be a very interesting part of the proceedings: the providing of the inner man, as likewise of the inner woman. Needless to say that the Union Ladies had provided a sumptuous repast for their guests, to which ample justice was very likely done. The remainder of the programme consisted of:— A Duet—Whispering hope—by the Misses Harley and Russell; Instrumental Music by Messrs. Stewart and Williamson; Speech by Mr. W. C. Anslow. Foremost among the speeches of the evening was undoubtedly that gentleman's address, coming as it did from one who has always been a strong upholder of the Cause. The proceedings were then brought to a close by the whole audience joining in the singing of the National Anthem.

Subjoined is the list of the ladies and gentlemen who volunteered their services as stewards and waiters in dispensing the good things at the tables. Miss L. Harley; Mrs. B. Fairly; Miss Ada Thompson; Miss Mitchell; Miss Bella McCurdy; Mrs. Wm. Sutherland; Mrs. McLaughlin; Mrs. I. Clark; Mrs. T. Mullin; Mrs. J. Johnstone; and Messrs. C. Fish, J. Russell, W. R. Robinson, B. Fairry, W. C. Anslow, and Chas. Mitchell.

We cannot close this report without a few remarks of our own that have been suggested to our mind by the principle which we are aware, underlies those Temperance serials, and about which no close observer can be mistaken. As in the case of the Women's T. C. Union's entertainment in Chatham, the settlement that presided over the Newcastle's social is the same, and the feeling that gave rise to it can neither be mistaken, any more in the one than in the other. It is Temperance harmonized for the ear, the better to reach the heart. The successful carrying out of last Friday's entertainment is another instance of woman's aptitude for Temperance work, and of the means at her command, when the circumstances would utterly fail. Temperance meetings, and Temperance lectures alone have lost power of attraction, at least so far as the masses and the general public are concerned. Temperance women have found that out, and by surrounding their entertainments with the charms which beauty, music and singing are known to possess, they draw in a crowd, which is the great object in all Temperance gatherings, under whatever name they may present themselves. That is the whole secret about it, and one which our Temperance societies might do well to avail themselves of. And here we would say as we close, that if the Liquor Traffic is ever rooted out of the community, if its last vestiges are made to disappear, it will be done through an influence stronger than man's. Woman's. In her we trust. L. H. T. Chatham, April 15th, 1890.

(Publish by Request) SERMON Preached in St. John's Church, Chatham April 6th, 1890. BY REV. N. MCKAY.

"And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."—Rom. I. The central truth of this text is the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. The thoughts of Christendom are to-day revolving round this truth as a common centre. It is impossible to overestimate the importance of this truth in the structure of our Christian economy. The holy Scriptures everywhere speak of it as a fundamental truth. In the epistle to the Corinthians Paul seems to hinge every thing upon it. "Christ is risen then are the dead raised." "If Christ is not risen then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain." "If Christ be not risen your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." It is obvious that in the judgment of the apostle the value of all christian teaching stands or falls with the Resurrection of Christ.

The enemies of Christianity as well as its friends continually manifest their sense of the importance of this doctrine. The fire of our assailants is directed against this doctrine as the very keystone of the Christian System. If the evidence in support of this doctrine can be successfully refuted or explained away they feel certain of an easy victory on every other point. To enable us to stand firm in the midst of conflict and to give good account of ourselves as soldiers of the Cross, we shall do well to survey some of the arguments on which this assuring and comforting doctrine rests.

I. We are grateful to the enemies of Christ for some important points in this argument. 1. We must be clearly certain that Jesus had been slain. He died upon the Cross. That mode of execution was, alas! too common among the semi-barbarous nations of antiquity. The tender mercies even of the most cultured of the pagan nations were cruel. Christ was on the Cross but a few hours. The victims of this revolting method of execution usually lingered for days. Christ was taken down from the Cross by friends among whom were Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus the Pharisee. Is it certain that he was really dead? Might he not have been simply unconscious? Might not a coma which has been handed down to us as a resurrection have been merely a resuscitation? Doubt on this point would have been fatal to all Christian hope. If there was no death there was no expiation. There was no shedding of blood for the remission of sins. If doubt could be established on this point a deadly blow would really be dealt at the Christian Faith. Our enemies have themselves placed this matter beyond all doubt. They were too eager for the life of Jesus to permit the least possibility of escape. What the tortures of the Cross might not accomplish in so short a time the spear of the Roman soldier was employed to make certain. A ghastly wound was inflicted, which would certainly have been fatal,—if the victim was not already dead,—if the victim was not already dead. By that cruel thrust the door is forever closed again all doubt as to the question whether Christ had really died. The result showed not only that Christ was dead, but that he had been dead for some time. It showed further that Christ had not died from the agonies of crucifixion but literally from a broken heart. Patiently he had borne toil and poverty and misrepresentation and calumny. Even betrayal and the ignominy of a mock trial, and of the scourging and the spitting moved him but little. Horribly he bore himself even when the myriads of darkness were let loose upon him. But when the thimble of which in all the past had shown approvingly upon him, was now averted in judicial displeasure it was more than he could bear. There was one bitter cry of anguish, and what was mortal in the Nazarene succumbed to the temporary dominion of the King of Terrors. The effrontery of scepticism does not dare to raise any question as to the certainty of Christ's death.

2. We are indebted to the enemy for the care they took to guard the body of Christ. If they had the courage to allege that his disciples stole the body from the custody of a Roman guard would they then not have said if the body had been left to the custody of the disloyal and treacherous Roman guard it would have been the best refutation of the claim that he had risen. Their inability to produce the body which they had so confidently taken into their care is equivalent to an admission that the claim of the disciples is true.

3. We are indebted to the enemies of Christ for the explanation they give why they cannot produce the body of Christ. When a man is very anxious to establish a point and supports it by a poor argument, presumably it is the best he can give. Had they held their peace we might suppose they had lost their reason and that when they saw the explanation of the fact that they could not produce the body of Christ, while they slept the disciples came and stole it, we hold the reckless playing of dishonest and desperate men. It is plain when men give such an explanation that they have no better to offer.

But these are only negative considerations. The story of the resurrection rests on a solid basis of proof as positive as anything coming from the past can be. Let us look.

II. At some of the positive grounds. I. Mark the sudden change in the attitude and conduct of the disciples. The tragedy of the crucifixion had enveloped them in a mantle of bewilderment and despair. They had been plainly told that Christ was to die and rise again, but they utterly failed to grasp the purport of that intimation. When they saw their Master they concluded that all was lost. We can readily gather their state of mind from the words of the two of them who went to Emmaus. As they went they talked, but their conversation was of painful memories and vanished hopes. Every verb they employ is in the past tense. The future is barren of encouragement. For their Messianic hopes there seems to be no future at all. Those who remain in Jerusalem are drawn together on that memorable evening. Why they had assembled is not clear. Perhaps they met to eat bread. Perhaps they were drawn together by the impulse of a common disappointment and sorrow. Perhaps they were moved by curiosity in regard to the yet disbelieved story of the women that they had seen and spoken of the last. Whatever the pulse led to their meeting, it was well they met; for a happy surprise awaited them. As they incredulously discussed the story of the women, Clophas and his companion entered and told of the thrilling discourse by the way, and the happy realization at Emmaus. As they listen to the strange recital their bewilderment increases but they are still incredulous. Presently without movement of closed door or bolted lock, Christ himself is in their midst with the signs of recent suffering on his person, and a benediction upon his lips. Who can picture the glad surprise of that moment when the old life of weakness and cowardice and unbelief in these disciples passes away and the new life of light and hope and heroic fidelity begins. The certainty of the resurrection gives them for them at least beyond dispute. Does some one suggest that they may have been mistaken—that in a state of eager expectancy they were awaiting the resurrection, and were therefore easily deceived by an apparition, or that the appearance of some impostor who simulated their master? I reply that the carefully recorded facts contradict the suggestion. It is not a matter of mere chance that the impostor was not ready to believe even when the event was told them. As for the second supposition let us illustrate.
