A Cardinal Sin.

Yet he dismounted and looked about him, not the less carefully because he felt it was hopeless. He looked high and low, but saw nothing of his pocket-book. He could not even find something he had carefully deposited a little way off; so, with his thin lips tightly shut, he mounted and rode back to Redhills, to face as best he could inquirers, congratulations and condolences. For a man, and, moreover, a Member of Parliament, who has shot a ruffian on the preceding night must expect plenty of such attention's.

Early as Mr. Bourchier had been that morning, there had been an earlier bird. Jim Stokes had retired to rest with the same resolve as to visiting a certain spot on the | tinople, Turkey. Brackley Road by daybreak. But chloral in the gentleman's case and gin in the poacher's has acted similarly-Mr. Stokes had not been quite as early as he intended. He, having no wife to wake him, had but himself to blame; and that men of his sort seldom do-they damn their luck instead. His bashfulness had made him shun the main road; but certain footways which cross Steepsides had brought him to his B.B.B. destination. He was luckier than Mr. Bourchier, for he found what he went after: and walked by the way he came back to his hovel, to examine at his leisure a hand-bag he had picked up. It was the print of his feet which had made Mr. Bourchier think of Crusoe.

There was an even earlier bird than these two. Farmer Davis, of Watercress Farm, the Redton side of Steepsides, a tenant of Mr. Bourchier's had business which took him to Blacktown, although the day was not market-day. He, never having heard of chloral, and being moderate as to gin, was up at the time he intended to be; and his cart-wheels were the first invaders of the pure white snow. Had you told Farmer Davis he was an unsuspecting admirer of nature, he would have assured you such a thing 'weren't in his line.' Nor would he have been the wiser if you had told him that an innate love of the beautiful made him glance approvingly at the snow covered firtrees, as he drove his old horse down the hill, when that bright wintry morning broke. 'Pretty thing snow be,' said Farmer Davis. 'Trees all look as pretty as a scene of the stage"-for once or twice he had been to Blacktown Theatre, and had been greatly impressed by the scene-painter's skill. So he looked at the graceful white-decorated firs again and again, and, moreover, happened to look at one when he had nearly reached the bottom of the steep hill. Then he pulled up his horse.

vur-trees,' said Farmer Davis. For, on the lowest branch of the young | it is 850 tons in weight. tree he was looking at, hung a black pocketbook, as neatly as if placed there intention. ally, not by chance.

Muttering sundry expressions of surprise, he drew as close to the bank as he could, and standing up in the cart, flickered with his whip until the strange fruit of the fir obtaining pure blood and removing bad blood tree fell down. He picked it up, but did not stop to examine it then. Time was slipping by, and a Westshire farmer who has to catch a train likes to be on the platform at least a quarter of an hour before the train is due-even at Sleeford Junction. When Farmer Davies, was safely ensconced in the train he began to investigate his windfall. It was a large double pocketbook, or, rather a letter-case. There were a good many papers in it, some of which faded with age. The farmer was not a quick First and Second Class Through Tickets are on reader, so he postponed deciphering them But among them was a paper the purport of which he knew from experience-it was a five-pound Bank of England note. The presence of this decided the fate of the pocket-book. Had its contents been value- Bangor, Portland & Boston; would have kept it until called for; but as there was money in it, back it must go to its owner, at once; and the owner's name was printed in gilt letters inside it-James Boucher, High Street, Newham.

He transacted his business in Placktown, and before he returned home went, according to custom, to smoke a p'.pe and drink a glass of deep-brown brand-water at the Thos. Hoben, Jas. Wetmore, Railway Inn? He was one of those men who, although the ey would be indignant if it was asserted hat writing was a matter of difficulty 'to them, yet prefer that someone else st ould write their letters. So he asked "barmaid," a respectable, motherly woman of about fifty, to do the pocket-book up in paper and direct it to the address

So the pocket-book was packed up, directed, and sent to its supposed owner, with Farmer Davis' bill for expenses inside

James Boucher had been dead some months, but the postal clerks in Newham knew all about him, so, instead of the packet being opened and redirected to the sender with "Dead"-no address," written across it, some one took the trouble to go No more cheap tintypes, after outside red-tapeism and inquire the address Saturday, June 13th. outside red-tapeism and inquire the address of his representative. This, with some difficulty, was ascertained; and in about three weeks' time the postman duly deposited the packet at No. 72 Gray Street, London, directed to John Boucher, the only son of the Farmer Davis little thought that his respected landlord would have willingly given him the fee simple of Watercress Farm in exchange for those papers in that black pocketbook.

One Dollar and Sixty Cents a Year! I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE

The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the AD JANCE to those non-paying subscribers. Cotton Waste, Etc. Etc. The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially

Having published the ADVANCE for sixteen years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore enterprise-a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that cleanliness of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day-I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
