

Aunt Dalrymple.

for your own good. She has written me, offering to settle a fair income on me and your sisters, and to make you her heiress.

But I should like to have you hear how I came to do as I have. Will you come? "I don't think anything you could say would alter my opinion of the facts."

"Not if I tell Aunt Dalrymple everything in your presence." "It would be a pity to spoil all your plans in that way. She would never forgive you."

"I don't expect her to do so. Perhaps I don't deserve either her forgiveness or yours. But I should like to have you hear how I came to do as I have. Will you come?"

"I'll think it." He rose, and bowing ceremoniously, as to any comparative stranger, left her just as her partner came to claim her for the next dance.

"I deserve it. I ought to have done what they may." "I know you're right, but the consequence be what they may."

She said nothing to Aunt Dalrymple that night. She waited to see if her husband would not come the next day.

Max Chilton was very angry. At first he said to himself he would never see his wife again. But he loved her in spite of all he thought of her, and love tugged at his heart strings, till he went to Aunt Dalrymple's.

In his presence Juliet told Aunt Dalrymple the whole story, not sparing herself, but acknowledging that, beside wishing to screen her step-mother, she had been tempted for herself. She humbly begged her forgiveness.

Aunt Dalrymple would hardly hear her through. She was furious. "You have made me ridiculous in the sight of my friends, and I will never forgive you for it," she said.

Juliet turned to her husband. "And you?" she said sadly. "Max Chilton extended his arms. 'Your mother never told me about your letter. It is not half so hard as I supposed it would be to forgive you. Let us go home.'"

Juliet clung to him weeping. Aunt Dalrymple turned and went to her own room without another word, and refused to see them again.

know everything," said Juliet. "But you are mistaken. I have been to blame, but not so much as you think. As you say this is no place for a scene, come to Aunt Dalrymple's to-morrow, and hear what I have to say for myself."

They went away at once. Juliet left all Aunt Dalrymple's presents behind her.

Aunt Dalrymple lived many years after that, but she never forgave either Juliet or her step-mother, and when she died she left all her money to a charity.
