REVERE

About seven years ago I had a humor break out upon my face; it started in a small blotch and looked like the sting of a bee, then it spread and looked like a ringworm, and becume very painful. I at once went to one of the best doctors in the city, and he could do me no good. No less than twelve of the best doctors have had a trial at my face, and all of them failed. I will not give you a list of their names, but will say that they were from Boston, New York, and Maine, also from England, France, and Canada. I have leen a hotel cook and steward for years. In the summer I cook at watering places; that is why I have had an opportunity of being among good is why I have had an opportunity of being among good doctors. They could not cure my face, and I had given up all hopes of ever being any better. Last June, I went to Moose head Lake, Maine, to cook for the season. My face was so bad I did not like to be seen. At the lake I met a gentleman from England. they would cure me at once. I did so. The resuit was, in three weeks the sores on my face were I eated up. I used it all the season. My face is all well, and no scars to be seen. as the aroma of a rose. The young man who found himself for the first time in this lovely garden-the Alameda of the city of Mexico-had seen all of the world's most famous pleasure-grounds; but he sail to himself, as he lay back in his shade-arched seat, that there was something here which pleased the eye and the fancy weakened the imagination, and charmed the senses to a degree that no spot which he had ever seen could surpass. For the spell was the spell of Mexico herself,-Mexico, with her shadowy history of past empires and vanished races, her traditions of ancient splendor, her marvellous Conquest, her picturesque people, and her aspect of Europe, the Orient, and the New World blended in a whole of romantic interest and wonderful beauty. Something of all this seemed to Derwent expressed in the scene before him, in the tropical loveliness of the beautiful pleasure-ground and in the old-world grace and solidity of every object fashioned by the liver regulator. hand of man. From the stone bench on which he sat, with its high back and sculp- ters for liver complaint, and can clearly say ! tured ends, that might have been taken from am a we'l woman to-day. a classic picture, to the noble towers of the two great churches that look at each other across the Plazuela Morelos and of which he had a glimpse through one of the leafy avenues, all was suggestive of Europe in the days when craftsmen were artists, when men wrought with a beauty and a skill that the world of to-day can only feeble copy. and builded not only for themselves but for the generations that were to follow them. Yet to fancy himself even for a moment in a European city was impossible. If the Spaniard planted deep in the land of the Aztec his art, his laws, his language, and his faith, he left-unlike other conquerors of whom we know-the race to whom Gcd had given it, and to-day in the city of Cortez the young stranger had seen Aztec faces filling the churches, the streets, and the marketplaces, and forms so purely Indian that they might have met the conquistadores passing down the beautiful avenues and loitering around the shaded fountains of the Alameda. There was to him so much interest in the striking contrasts of the scene-in the close juxtaposition of a brilliant civilization with the most primitive types of human lifethat he let his thoughts wander far back into the history of this fescinating land, while a succession of different figures came down the shaded vistas, passed around the great basin of the fountain that occupied the centre of the circle where he sat, and disappeared in some one of the radiating pavement of Pall Mall; then a sandalled peon in wide cotton trousers, gayly-striped blanket, and straw sombrero : next a gentleman with Spanish dignity in every line of face and figure; presently a group of Mexican ladies, silken-clad, lace-draped, on their way to masa, with ivory prayer-books and silver rosaries in their hands; a dark-faced wo:nan with a baby wrapped in the close tolds of her blue scarf passed, followed by a

CHAPTER I. Derwent sat down on a stone bench and looked about him with a sense of satisfaction akin to delight. And it was indeed a delightful place into which he had wandered, -a place of broad avenues, shaded by immense trees, dividing pleasances full of the most enchanting greenness, where feathery shrubs and banks of emerald sward, hedges of geranium and rese, and masses of Nile lilies, with wide green leaves and white, He told me to use your Cuticura REM DIES, and golden-hearted chalices of bloom, were all sparkling with diamond-drops from the water lately and lavishly showered upon floor, were also damp from the spray that had fallen over them, and their leaf-shaded vistas led from all directions to circular spaces, where fountains played in the midst of great basins, or groups of statuary stood on pedestals of green grass sown with daisies. "Well met, Derwent !" he said. "I was on my way to the Iturbide to look you up. But I see you have found your way to the right place: only you are rather early." He

"Eleven o'clock : not so early as I thought. It will not be long now before all the world will be here." "A good deal of the world seems to be here at present," said Derwent. "I have been watching for some time the remarkably varied character of the people passing." "Oh, that can be seen at any time," an swered the other. "But Sunday morning after mass the fashionable world has a dress-parade in the Alameda. Everybody in Mexico-especially everybody who is any-scene for an hour or two. There goes the first sign of it." He indicated an Indian who trotted by with a dozen or two chairs skilfully bound together and arranged in a pyramid on his back. These he conveyed to the chief avenue leading from San Francisco Street into the heart of the park, where a woman removed them from his back and placed them in a line on the side of the avenue, putting a narrow strip of carpet before them. Others were engaged in the same manner on the opposite side; and soon two rows of chairs faced each other along the length of
