> How the Parties Stand [Quebec Chronicle.]

We notice in a late issue of the Mail, an nteresting article on "the doubtful seats. The remarks just now are valuable. showing how the two parties stood in ; lation to each other, at the close of the general elections in 1887. There was dif ficulty in classifying the seats at first, in the Province of Quebec, it will be remembered. There were Liberals, Nationalists, (Rielists) aud Conservatives. The loose fish, were of course, the Rielists. Eventually, all but two or three of the latter passed over to th Government side. To-day, we hear nothing about them. As a party, they no longer live in Federal politics. As a party they
