HOUSE. A BAD FACE HUMOR.

Covering the Face with Disfiguring, Painful Blotches, Cured by Cuticura Remedies,

General Business.

About seven years ago I had a humor break out upon my face; it started in a small blotch and looked like the sting of a bee, then it spread and looked like a ringworm, and became very painful. I at once went to one of the best doctors in the city, and he went to one of the best doctors in the city, and he could do me no good. No less than twelve of the best doctors have had a trial at my face, and all of them failed. I will not give you a list of their names, but will say that they were from Boston, New York, and Maine, also from England, France, and Canada. I have teen a hotel cook and steward for years. In the summer I cook at watering places; that is why I have had an opportunity of being among good doctors. They could not cure my face, and I had given up all hopes of ever being any better. Last J une, I went to Moosehead Lake, Maine, to cook for the season. My face was so bad I did not like to be seen. At the lake I met a gentleman trom England. He told me to use your Cuticura Rem dies, and they would cure me at once. I did so. The resuit they would cure me at once. I did so. The result was, in three weeks the sores on my face were lealed up. I used it all the season. My face is all well, and no scars to be seen. I have recommended it to and no scars to be seen. I have recommended it to a number, and in every case it has cured them. It would take a great deal of mon-y to put me back where I was one year ago, providing I did not know what your Cuticura would do. I shall recommend it as long as I live and shall ever remain,

But it's the friend's part to sound the warning, all the same, whether it's agreeable or not. You might think of your mother and sister a little in the matter too."

"What the deuce have they, or have you. or has anyone, for the matter of that, to say anything against Mrs. McPherson Bristed?" cried Lakely, starting up and confronting his friend, with his boyish features affush and a kindly light in his

It was not in this young man's nature to look forward with much relish to the interview. He felt that he had before him something extremely distasteful. It is even possible that he was inclined to take some credit to himself when he reflected upon the trouble he was at to oblige his friend's family and to keep the boy himself from a piece of folly he should spend the rest of his life in regretting. But in another way he last year. accounted himself repaid for anything he might do, even before it was done. For nothing could be sweeter or fairer or more charming than Cecelia Lakely, Horace's

She was a mere school girl, to be sure, but Hurlburt Bristed admired the type. An ingenious young girl who was to him the most delightful thing in nature. And he smiled often, as he took himself to Mrs. McPherson's hotel, in rememberance of certain warm, shy glances which had fallen from those dovelike eyes these latter times since he had been exerting himself to much in her brother's behalf. In helping Horace he was really wooing in the sure t way, if indirectly, the elusive flower of this young

He was still thinking of Cecilia as he sat waiting for Mrs. McPherson to appear. He was, indeed, so much engrossed in his reveries that he looked up only when the lady good we cannot do without it. he had come to see stood close in front of him. She had entered softly by a door at the side of him. As he rose a little confusedly she covered him suddenly with a wonderful smile.

The young widow-it was impossible not to think of her as younger than she wasstood there an instant and then sank into her chair opposite her visitor. She begged him to resume his seat. She seemed to wait, still with that unusual, that almost harmonious smile, for him to begin. From her presence, at once assured and unobtrusive, animated and reposeful, from her delicate toilet, there emanated an aroma, as it were, which flattere I all the senses.

"I believe you are Horace Lakely's great friend," said this gracious creature in a well modulated voice. The next day Mrs. Lakely awaited Bristed's promised visit with eager impatience. "On Horace's being most anxious to marry Mrs. McPherson-yes," amended Bristed. "But I do not-I am not sure"-"Do you mean," interrupted the poor lady, holding herself very straight, her mien, in its outraged maternal pride, becoming almost majestic, "that Mrs. Mc-Pherson is playing fast and loose with my son? That she would reject him at the last

That Horace Lakely should marry such a person as McPherson's -widow was horrible enough. But, that being so inclined, Mrs. to stop-a long way off of matrimony. That's Likely's darling, her eldest born, her handsome, privileged son, should be subjected to the indignity of a refusal from a source, surely that was almost more terrible still. You're such a cool, reasonable fellow yourself that you won't be able to understand that my whole life seems to have bound itself about this woman,"

There was a tone throughout the letter which testified that Horace Lakely was still a good deal of a boy. It was somewhat of a consolation for Hurlburt Bristed to think that it was so. At least it made it Would Mr. Bristed go to this "person" and somewhat easier for him to write in answer
