" 'Was' is not 'is.' "-As You Like It. One evening shortly before the wedding, Miss Susan gave at her brother's request, the nearest approach to a party that the Shore House had witnessed for years. The guests were few in number: only Dr. Fleming and the minister, Kitchen Utensils and Furnishings. Mr. Blair, with his daughter, being asked to meet Jean and her parents.
Captain Dundas, who had been unusually well of late, talked in a lively fashon while tea was in progress; and when the company adjourned to the drawing-room, he opened his seldom touched piano, and offered to sing if his sister would accompany him. Charmed to see him so bright and happy, Miss Susan got out a pile of music, and as she searched for some of his old songs, reflected with satisfaction that she had done right in withdrawing her opposition to the engagement. It was delightful to see Continued on 4th Page.
