Miramichi Advance.

CHATHAM, N. B., - - - APRIL 7, 1892.
(From the Gentleman's Magazine)
A Queen's Servant in Cargien.
"He's late the night," says the man.
"Ay, that is he," declared the woman.
John Eunie sits closer to the fire, spreads his great hands more fully over the warm pot "leaw" and pulls hard at his brown clay pipe.
Eppie, his wife, crouching on a low stool by the other side of the hearth, gathered her rough viney gown very tightly around her feet, rattles the needles in the middle of a big stocking with renewed vigor, and she too does justice to an old black cutty.

This goes on for a little while, during which no word is spoken; only the click, click of the busy needles is heard; the smack of old lips pulling away at seasoned pipes; the lapping blaze of the peats in the big-bellied chimney; with an occasional "Oich! Oich!" from John, and a sympathetic "Umph! Umph!" from Eppie.
There are two windows in this little kitchen: a six-paned one, looking out on the front garden and the broad toll-road, and a single-paned one, opening like a big eye in the northern gable. These are set, clear to the blast without shutter in the open, or blind within (God bless you! we have nothing to hide in Cargien), and the big raindrops, driven by the loud wind, play with a wintry music against the glass.

Meanwhile, far away down the toll-road Robbie the "post" is toiling along with the letters from Kail.
Presently a shrill and long protracted whistle is heard; not heeded at first by either of the placid smokers; but as it continues loud and increasing in volume, followed by the fierce bark of a collie-dog, John takes his pipe out of his teeth says "Oich! Oich! Oich!" and Eppie, ceasing at once to knit and smoke, adds her "Umph! Umph! Umph!"
Then John looks at Eppie, and Eppie gazes at John.
"Get up an' ope the door," is the expression on John's face.
"If it shudna be oped this hunder year, it'll no be oped be me," gleams defiantly through Eppie's spectacles.
"Oich! Oich!" grunts John dolefully.
"Umph! Umph!" rejoins Eppie, beginning to be submissive for once to the authority of her "man," the parish undertaker and postmaster; and then she adds, "It'll be Staneton, I'm thinkin'."
"Ay! ay!" cries Staneton. Gang out, woman!" cries John, in his most valorous tones.
"Whew-ew! Whew-ew-ew-ew!" sounds once more through the window and down the chimney.
Then Eppie hobbles up, and hurries to the back door. She opens it just wide enough to show a long honest nose and the glitter of moonshaped spectacles, and says she, "Aweel an' it's yersel, sir."
"Ay! ay!" cries the farmer, shaking his wet and shaggy sides. "Hae ye ony?" adds he.
"Deil a one," rejoins Eppie with some sarcasm, not free from a touch of malevolence, for she knows (who so well as she!) what brings the farmer of Staneton time after time to the little post-office. "The auld bit body is still thinkin' an' thinkin' o' that lassie that writes tae im, —God save her frae ane that has a foot an' mair in the cauld yerth!" So she gently shuts the door in his face, and returns to her Umph! Umph!

But the farmer whistles more shrilly than ever. Guid preserve us!" roars John Eunie, springing to his feet like a lusty youngster and "hirplin" to the door without his oaken staff, "as the Lord made us, it's the Blankshire Journal."
"I hae brought ye a read o' the paper, John," says the farmer, disregarding the presence of his female enemy, and passing from under his thick coat a greasy journal, sagely wrinkled and partly torn, but not more than a week old.
"I thank ye, Staneton, an' I thank ye, but will ye no come awa' in?"
"What, John, horse an' all!" cries the farmer.
"Ha! ha! an' that's a guid joke, that it is," says John, chuckling happily to himself, for a man who has got an unlooked-for read of the Blankshire Journal naturally feels considerable elation of spirit. For, mind you, the paper cost three-pence, and it is only the great ones in Cargien who can afford that price, while even they band themselves together in little coteries to unite their subscriptions for a single weekly copy. Eppie, too, is mollified, for she is a great reader of the news, drawing a line only at the extravagance of her "man" if he were to buy a paper himself.
So Eppie passes out her hand with a gesture of command, and John meekly surrenders the coveted sheet.

"John Eunie!" says the farmer, in a hoarse whisper.
"Ay!" says John, with the same restraint upon his voice.
"Is he come?" adds the farmer.
"No," says John.
"The Lord be thankit," cries the farmer, "ye'll send the queanie up w't when Robbie does come, will ye no?"
"Whist!" says John, turning his left eye upon Eppie, now sitting by the hearth, and with the other winking shrewdly at the man on horseback.
Then, without another word, the farmer of Staneton rides away into the rain and the darkness.

John returns to the fireside and listens to the news, dealt out at intervals by Eppie his wife, who has the paper and is not likely to part with it.
And still, far down the toll-road, Robbie the "post" is toiling onward from Kail, with the big letter-bag on his shoulder.
"Aweel affair at the Links o' Dornie!"—reads Eppie from the Journal, "a man—umph! umph! —g-o-r-e-d—gorit to death by a mad—"
Rat-tat-tat! here sounds loud upon the kitchen door.
"Dam ye!" says John, blowing a mouthful of smoke up the chimney, and then, in a sweet, postmaster voice, "Come awa' in."
The door opens slowly, and a young country girl enters, wrapped in a gaudy woollen shawl covering the head in place of a bonnet and fastened with a showy silver buckle under the chin. She stands modestly in the middle of the floor for a few seconds without uttering a syllable; shaking her wet viney gown and moving uneasily from one foot to the other. John Eunie is silent too—a slow man he is!—and all that Eppie does is to press the horn-rimmed spectacles more firmly upon her nose, and stare rudely at the country lassie.
The lassie blushes, but at length gaining courage, she says, "It's a 'head' I'm wantin'."
"Gie the queanie a 'head,' John Eunie," cries Eppie, in a stern voice.
Her "man," with inward sorrow, must needs obey this injunction, for the queen, whose servant he is has a claim upon him, as well as the queen bee in his own hive. So he hobbles to the mahogany table by the big front window, unlocks a drawer with key obtained from Eppie, takes out a "head," and solemnly presents it to the bashful, blushing lassie.
Kirsty Dean—for that is her name—feeling very guilty, now pulls a letter from the folds of her shawl, then, with awkward trembling fingers, affixes the "queen's head" to the envelope and passes it into the hands of the Cargien undertaker and postmaster. John receives it with dignity, carefully glancing at its general outward appearance as one would at a packet possibly containing some infernal machine. Then he puts his glasses on and reads the address, making a mental note of the same for the information of his good gossip and wife Eppie; and, now satisfied, places it in the mahogany drawer. The lassie, never having moved from the middle of the floor, still lingers, and at last she says, "Is he no in?"
"Robbie?" says Eppie.
"Ay, Robbie," replies Kirsty Dean.
"Na," says Eppie laconically, for breath is scarce in old age.
"Gae near the fier," says John, now divining that she is on the outlook for a letter.
And still away down the toll-road auld Robbie the "post" plods wearily along.
They say that when a man has obtained a great success, or been rewarded with a piece of rich luck, he had better beware, for it is just then that misfortune is dogging his footsteps. Holy Writ puts this in a somewhat different form: "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Now John Eunie has just had his piece of good luck in the unexpected acquisition of the Blankshire Journal, and in his declining years he has begun to think a trifle too highly of his spouse and himself as joint masters of the post-office, more especially as the Blankshire has once spoken of them as "that worthy couple who have so long and faithfully, etc. etc." What wonder therefore, that malignant fate should now be in arms against Eppie and himself! Well, the point I am coming to is this: John is scarcely seated cozily in his chair once more when a smart young footman enters with a letter to the postmaster himself from the redoubtable Laird of Cargien.
John takes the epistle and reads it—
"Mr. Malcolm Seth presents his compliments to John Eunie (who is the postmaster), and beg to inform him that unless he, John Eunie, causes his wife Elspeth or Eppie Eunie to discontinue interfering with Mr. Seth's letters, such unlawful curiosity will have to be brought to the notice of the postmaster-general."
