HER INHERITANCE.

"If any relatives of the late James Handford, some time curate of Widston, be still living, they may hear of something to their advantage by applying to Messrs. Dodd & Son, solicitors, King Street.'

Barbara Reed put down the paper with a jerk. "I wonder if place. that means me," she said, thoughtfully. "My grandfather's name was certainly James Handford, and I know he was a curate, but I did not know there was any money in in no hurry for a few days." the family."

"If you think it worth while go to Messrs. Dodd & Son and find out," suggested a sharp-featured, elderly lady, who was stitching at the table opposite.

'Of course I will! Why, there may be £5,000 waiting for me

"Or £5, more likely," supplemented the stitcher.

Barbara laughed. "I'd rather think of the thousands, Mrs. Stewart; they would be very much more to my advan-

"I know of something that would be more to your advantage than all the money you are ever likely to get from advertisements, if you had but the good sense to see it," returned that lady, signifi-

Barbara flushed as she left the room to get her cloak and bonnet and set out for home. She was the music mistress in Mrs. Stewart's school, and had been one of the most promising pupils in it before that; she was almost alone in the world, except for a distant aunt with whom she lived, and after school days ended it became necessary that she should do something toward keeping up the little household, she had been very glad when Mrs. Stewart's proposal to retain her for the younger girls' music lessons saved her from applying to strangers.

Still, notwithstanding her obligations, there were times when Barbara felt strongly disposed to protest against that lady's authority, which was pretty much as it had been in the days when she was "quite a child," as Barbara often phrased it to herself. "She never seems to remember that I am grown up and able to manage my own affairs. It does not follow that because I was her pupil once she has any right to interfere in the matter now.

She was marching down the road, her head well up, while she argued the matter out to her own satisfaction, when someone quietly fell into step behind her. The shadow vanished from her brow like morning mist as she looked

"What are you in such a hurry for? I could scarcely keep you in sight," inquired the newcomer.

It was the subject of Mrs. Stewart's admonition, her drawingmaster-clever enough at his profession, but of his industry and general dependableness she had not the highest opinion. Not so Miss Barbara, who was fast developing a very warm sentiment for the good looking young artist.

"I am going home to deposit my music; after that I think of making a journey into the city, to King

Mr. Lawrence's face showed such genuine interest in the news that Barbara speedily told him all she knew, perhaps with a little unconscious exaggeration by way of justifying her first announce-

It is to be particularly understood that all outstanding subscription accounts due after November 6th, 1890, are to be settled on the old terms, viz., $2 per year, the advertised credit rate.

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE | Said mortgage was duly recorded on the 25th day of February, A. D. 1891, in volume 63 of the county for two reasons The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the AD JANCE to those non-paying subscribers. The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the

Having now published the ADVANCE for nearly 19 years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore enterprise-a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that cleanliness of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day-I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
