IMPORTANT NOTICE.

To Store Keepers, Traders, and the General Public.

PEREMPTORY SALE OF SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS.

The ENORMOUS stocks of SUTHERLAND & CREAGHAN both at Chatham and Newcastle, thrown on the market regardless of COST or consequences. $75,000.00 worth of new and seasonable merchandise to be sacrificed—no reserve—all must go. Having purchased for spot cash the stock and real estate at Chatham and doubled the capacity of the premises, I have decided to continue the business at Chatham as well as at Newcastle on my own account. My long business experience of 18 years on the Miramichi, and the kindness I have always received, impel me to make greater efforts to please the public—who will find my stores at Chatham and Newcastle first-class warehouses in every respect. Ladies will have no cause to send outside for goods or samples. The very latest designs can always be found on my counters as soon as they leave the makers hand's. I have just returned from a business visit to the leading centres of trade in the United States and Canada having selected large lots of the latest novelties for spring and summer wear. As competition is a test, I respectfully invite keenest comparison and inspection of these merchandizes—no trouble to show goods or give samples.—Chatham and Newcastle.

The Great O'Donoghue.

A Legend of Killarney.

BY M. J. MURRAY.

It was towards the close of a warm summer day in the year 1730 that two footsore and weary travellers slowly dragged themselves along the Kenmare road. One, a man of perhaps sixty years of age, whose tall, erect figure and military carriage denoted the soldier, seemed to be the father of the other, a girl of delicate mould. Both were plainly but neatly clad in the costume of the period.

The shadows were beginning to lengthen, and the crest of the venerable Carran Tuel, that monarch of the Reeks, was bathed in glory by the last rays of the dying sun, when the old man halted.

'Mary, my child, night will soon be upon us.' He spoke in the full, rich tones of the Munster Gaelic; a voice that is soft and round as the voice of the far famed Creimona violin. 'Where we shall rest, I know not. The way is dark and rough and I am in fear for thy gentle self.'

'Fear not for me, father,' answered the maiden. 'My heart is brave, and while thou art with me I shall want for nought.'

'Hark, what was that?' suddenly cried the old man, starting forward.

The girl listened intently for a few moments and replied: 'Methinks I hear the sound of hoofs.'

'Heaven send it,' the old man exclaimed fervently; 'for the rider, if he be a gentleman, will direct us to a place of shelter.'

Nearer and nearer came the sound of horses approaching at a rapid gallop and both strained their eyes to catch the first glimpse of the horsemen. At length, around a bend in the road, dashed two strange looking men on coal black steeds. The foremost of the two was encased in an antique steel armour, similar to that worn in the early ages, and his steed was in a like manner accoutred. The second rider was evidently an equerry or groom, and was dressed in hose and doublet of ancient make. A heavy two-edged sword hung at his side, but otherwise he possessed no weapon. The old man and his daughter gazed in wonder at the strange beings and as the latter approached, withdrew to the side of the road to let them pass. The strange knight seemed to have no such intention, however, for he drew rein and stopped in front of the bewildered travellers.

'Heaven save thee, honest man, and thee also, fair lady. How comes it that we are overtaken here by the night.'

'My story is a strange one, Sir Knight,' replied the old man, approaching the horseman, 'and if it please thee to listen I will relate to thee our history.'

The mailed knight leaped from his horse as lightly as though unencumbered by the massive armor in which he was encased.

'It would indeed be a pleasure, good friend,' said he, leaning against his horse and resting his arm on its back.

'Then know, Sir Knight, that I am the last of the direct line of the MacCarthy's More, Princes of Desmond. Not far from here, and contiguous to where the ruins of the holy Mucross Abbey stands as a monument to my race, I was born some sixty years ago. My father was a soldier, and braver than he never drew sword in defence of his country's honor. He taught me the arts of war and trained me in the use of the sword until I had few equals in its use. While yet a boy I attached myself to Sarsfield's regiment in which my father was an officer, and fought by his side in the seige of Limerick. When the cause was lost, my gallant father, leaving his brothers in charge of our demesne, set sail for the Low Countries, taking me with him. There we rejoined our beloved Sarsfield, and with him cut a path of victory on many a hard fought field. Alas! for the dark day. On the plain of Flanders I saw our gallant general fall, striken unto death. My father raised his head upon his knee and Sarsfield, gazing into his face, raised his hand, crimsomed with his heart's red fountain, saying: 'See, they have slain me. Would to God my blood was shed for Ireland.'

'A fresh spurt of blood burst from his wound and our gallant Sarsfield was no more. After that battle my father and I went to Paris, where I married the sister of a comrade, the mother of my child here. My father died abroad and after many years of absence I returned yesterday to find my cousin in possession of my estates, which he refuses to deliver into my hands until I pay him a thousand pounds in gold for the improvements he claims to have made upon them Where am I to obtain so much money I know not, as all I possessed scarcely sufficed to bring us here. For myself I care not. My life is almost at its close, but she, my daughter yonder, is but a fragile child and knows nothing of the world. To think that she should suffer wrings my heart.'

'Whither goest thou now?' asked the knight.

'Alas! I know not.'

'Are you without shelter?'

'Aye,' replied the old man, 'that we are.' 'I begged shelter for the night from the churl, but he refused it. 'He told us to seek it from the O'Donoghue who dwells near here.'

The knight made a sign to the equerry, who leaped upon his horse and disappeared in the darkness. Shortly afterwards he dashed up, leading two magnificent horses.

One was a powerful charger, similar to that ridden by the knight, and the other a beautiful lady's palfrey.

'The churl did well to bid thee seek the O'Donoghue,' said the knight. 'I am he; I bid thee welcome to my castle and if I mistake not we will make thee and thy daughter more comfortable than thou wouldst be with yonder knave. Mount, good sir, be mine the pleasure of assisting thy gentle daughter.'

So saying the O'Donoghue with scarcely an effort seemingly, lifted Mary to her seat on the palfrey. Then quickly mounting his own steed the knight led the way at a marvellous speed.

The darkness around them had now grown intense and no object could be discerned. It was impossible to guide their steeds so they gave them a loose rein, trusting to the instinct of the animals to find the road. That they were going in the right direction they were quite sure, as directly in front of them could be seen the sparks of fire from the hoofs of the knight's noble charger. The pace was a fearful one, but the horses had that cat-like hoof for which our Southern Irish horses are noted, and as both of the riders were expert equestrians it was no difficult task for them to keep in the saddle. Had it been a daylight ride, there is no doubt that both riders would have enjoyed it immensely, but flying through impenetrable darkness is quite another thing, and Mary's heart almost stood still as they tore along in that mad gallop. Suddenly a light in the far distance flashed through the darkness; then another and another, and in a little while the illuminated windows of the great castle burst upon their view. Nearer and nearer they came and it was but a brief while ere they were dashing over the drawbridge and into the courtyard of the castle.

'The O'Donoghue welcomes thee to his castle, gallant sir, and you, fair lady; all that is within these walls is at thy service.'

'From my heart I thank thee, Sir Knight, replied Mary. 'Were it not for thy kindness, my father and I might even now be lying beneath the falling dew.'

The knight bowed and assisting Mary to alight, conducted her to a spacious apartment where a number of richly dressed ladies and gentlemen rose to greet them. They evidently awaited the coming of the knight in order to begin the evening meal, for on the board before them a royal repast was spread. Haunches of venison and kingly salmon rested on platters of solid gold. Jewelled goblets were filled with rosy wine, while the choicest fruits of every clime were piled in many colored pyramids at intervals along the table. Golden candelabra were filled with countless wax candles, the light of which threw a halo over the scene and caused the myriad of gems with which the ladies were decked to sparkle like flashes of living light. At the head of the board and at the right hand of the master's seat sat the chief bard, and near by sat the filidhe or poets with jewelled harps in their hands. The knight raised his hand to stop the shouts and cries of pleasure that greeted his entrance, and motioning MacCarthy and his daughter to come forward, he said:

'Friends, it is your duty as well as mine to extend a greeting to one of Erin's fairest ladies and her noble father, MacCarthy More. His sword flashed 'neath the banner of Sarsfield in defense of Motherland. Need I say more?'

'No! no!' cried all.

Preferential Trade.

PREFERENTIAL trade properly consists in giving the preference to Burdock Blood Bitters when seeking for a cure for constipation, dyspepsia, headache, biliousness, jaundice, scrofula, poisonous humours, bad blood, rheumatism or kidney complaints. It is the true cure, and has cured cases which has resisted all other tretment.

The trades Congress, in session at Glasgow, the other day rejected a motion to promote a bill in Parliament to prevent importation of foreign labor during strikes. The vote stood 215 against and 204 in its favor.

CATARRH

Is a most loathsome, dangerous, and prevalent malady. It is a blood disease, usually of Scrofulous origin, and for which local treatment is useless. Before health is possible, the poison must be eradicated from the system, and to do this the disease must be treated through the blood. For this purpose no remedy is so effective as Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"For the past eight years, I have been severely afflicted with Catarrh, none of the many remedies I tried affording me any relief. My digestion was considerably impaired, and my sleep disturbed by phlegm dropping into my throat. In September last I resolved to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, began to use it at once, and am glad to testify to a great improvement in my health."—Frank Teson, Jr., engineer, 270 West Fourth street, New York City.

"My daughter, 16 years old, was afflicted with Catarrh from her fifth year. Last August she was

TREATED WITH

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after three months of this treatment she was completely cured. It was a most extraordinary case, as any druggist here can testify."—Mrs. D. W. Barnes, Valparaiso, Neb.
