A BROTHER CHIEF.

Inaccessible as is the haughty Iroquois, there are instances when he unbends with the most exquisite condescension from his rigid tribal ordinances, and confers both honor and favor where worth merits the distinction. His keen insight into national and individual character seldom deceives him; it has been too often whetted by the white man's grinding stone of greed and injustice to lack an edge. There are few who meet the North American Indians disinterestedly; if native life is studied at all it is generally for gain. The researches made in not the subjects studied. scholar but strengthens his own mental acquirements, just as the trader fattens his pocketbook. But there are to this class of self-seekers some noble and welcome excally sympathetic regarding the rights of a royal humanity, but who are doing their utmost to show the world how the good old Indian character when unsullied by contamination with the vices of our white brethren, breathes nobility, romance and beauty, as forest pines in their native grandeur exhale a wild, stimulating perfume.

more tenacious of their birthrights -and of all heritages, chieftainship ranks the highest. The 'titled' families, exclusive and conservative for centuries, renew in each generation their claims to a peerage, the accession of which has never been weakened by the intermixture of race or blood. The Iroquois Chief possesses a purer pedigrec, a "bluer" blood, than any hand, British or French, that ever painted the Red, White and Blue within his territory.

But there are rare instances where this rite of chieftainship has been conferred upon outsiders, and the one I have in my memory is the occasion when one of England's young princes received this most exalted honor that his mother's Indian subjects could bestow. The Duke of Connaught, who was cheered by all "Canada from sea to sea" two years ago, has for twenty years been possessed of the right to sit among the hereditary chiefs in the great council and to have a voice in the administration of the affairs of the Six Nations.

Twenty years ago! My childish recollection of the ceremony consists of such rude outlines that I fear they would make but a very unfinished sketch if reproduced unaided, but this old yellow newspaper bearing the date of October 2, 1869, will be admirable reference and has the additional magic of having once been the property of the prince himself, and was sent to one of his favorite Mohawks with the direction written in the oldfashioned manner, on the wide white space near a big capital lettered heading. The ink is beginning to fade, but the writing, which is by the same pen as the little message inscribed on the inner margin, is still clear, with the firm English curve in its lettering, well known as that of the genial Arthur.

How he has changed since that day when some strong arm lifted me up to the windows and a kindly old gentleman took sufficient interest in my childish curiosity to tell me which was "the prince." cannot recall what I expected to see; what I did see was a slender, pale-featured. delicate-looking lad. garmented in a plain suit of gray tweed and an unpretentious black felt hat, which he lifted bashfully to the crowd that cheered with that strange wild, eerie intonation that only Indian throats can give.

The very memory of that checr thrills me now as I fancy a bugle call must thrill a war-horse. I see again those grand old Iroquois chiefs in their savage dress, their copper-colored faces dashed with red and black paint, their only head covering a tuft of eagle plumes that waved and swayed with each motion of the wearer's head, their metal tomahawks that gleamed in the yellow sunlight fascinating the eyes of the boyish prince as the warriors crowded near, eager to clasp his hand and to tell him in broken, almost unintelligible ed longingly at an old buckskin English how loyal they were to his coat with its tarnished silver "great mother" and how well they remembered his brother, the Prince of Wales.

But my childish eyes watched only two people in that vast gathering, the pale young prince and the dark, military-looking chief that rode beside him. How proud my little heart was of that rider! How well I knew those square, Napolenic shoulders, that beautiful buckskin costume, those brilliant silver medals and ornaments, that dainty, though deadly, scalping knife and well-worn tomahawk, how familiar was that flaunting crest of ostrich plumes that, waving, fell almost to the shoulders over which was flung the red broadcloth "blanket" that contrasted so vividly with the jet | the most sensational on record, black pony arching its head so reaches Paris from the Spanish proudly-for had not the queen's frontier. And on this latter occasion, when the whole atmosphere rang with cheers, there was one who crept quietly into an unpretentious parlor. She resurrected from a quaint birch bark basket an old yellow newspaper upon whose margin was written, "With kind regards from your brother chief - Arthur," who lookmedals, at a rusty tomahawk that lay on a British-red broadcloth-at some purple wampum belts and deerfoot anklets, but there is no one to wear them. Miramichi Advance.

Beginning with the issue of November 6th, 1890, when the ADVANCE entered upon its

Seventeenth Year of Publication! The publisher made an important change in the terms on which the paper is furnished to Subscribers. These include

1st. Strict adherence to the system of cash in advance for all subscriptions.

2nd. The reduction of the price of the paper to

One Dollar a Year

It is to be particularly understood that all outstanding subscription accounts due after November 6th, 1890, are to be settled on the old terms, viz., $2 per year, the advertised credit rate.

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, records, pages 147 and 148, and is numbered 128 in have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the AD JANCE to those non-paying subscribers. The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local

Having now published the ADVANCE for nearly 19 years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore said Anne Bateman by Leonard Jardine by Indenenterprise-a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that cleanliness of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day-I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
