Captain David Dundas, 'the captain,' as he was generally called in Elie, seated himself slowly, resigned to his sister's ready hand the stick he usually walked with, leant back in his chair, resting one elbow on the arm, while with his thin hand he still further shaded his eyes from the light, and then answered her. 'He was going further than I had thought, and as he seemed in haste, he was better without me.'

'Perhaps,' she said cheerly; 'but he would have been glad of your company, David; he aye likes a crack.'

The brother and sister contrasted strangely. Miss Susan, although much the older, was so alert and active in her movements-there was such a bright readiness in her speech and manner, and in her pleasant face-that it was difficult to believe in the twenty years of difference in their ages.

Hard foreign service in the navy from his boyhood, until five years ago he had been invalided home, and the irrecoverable effects of sunstroke and fever, had permaturely wrecked his energies, both bodily and mental; so that when these two survivors of a large and happy ished household, met again, Miss Susan scarcely rec gnized her brother.

Never had sick man a more kind and skilful nurse, and when he had regained such a measure of strength as he was likely to reach, and had not, as was evident, regained the clearness of mind, the ready wit the conversational power, that he had marked all her recollections of his early days, and had made the arrival of Davie's letters pleasant epochs in the family life of old; with tender, sisterly enthusiasm she devoted herself to the difficult task of cheering and interesting, soothing or stimulating, as might be required, his enfeebled and stricken With indignant scorn she had repudiated the doctor's suggestion, that a care so exhausting and unceasing should be deputed to, or even shared by, any hired assistant. Any one might be proud, she declared, to be in her place, to be a solace and companion to one who had done and suffered so bravely for his country. If she had risked her life and nearly died of sunstroke, instead of living in selfish comfort all her days, would David have wearied in taking care of her? she asked. Dr. Fleming thought it highly probable, but did not say so; like most men he felt unequal to the light skirmishing an argument with women requires. He therefore dropped the subject, and con-tented himself by aiding her ministrations to the best of his ability. No one, except herself, would have dreamt of describing Miss Dundas's life hetherto as one of selfish comfort. At the beck and call of any one among her large circle of friends who needed her, Cousin Susan's sweet face, angelic in its look of perfect self-forgetfulness and quick sympathy, brought sunshine in trouble, and comfort in sadness, wherever she went. So that now, indeed, when almost all her time was perforce occupied in attendance upon her invalid brother those who had hitherto made large demands on her help and com-panionship, grambled loudly, and considered themselves ill-used The children had all got through measles now, and cught to have a few weeks' change of air, if only Cousin Susan had been free to go with them! or the girls wanted to go to Edinburgh for a few weeks' gaiety-what a pity Cousin Susan couldn't come and look after their cross and gouty father to let them go!-and so on. But Susan, who would have sacrificed herself with place. delight, could not interfere with David's comfort and was therefore incredulously, 'some one in Ellie?" not to be tempted by the undoubted attractions of these and similar invitations.

David was her only thought. I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE for two reasons. The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the AD JANCE to those non-paying subscribers. The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies
