THE GREAT NEW STORY!

Terry Denver.

Copyright, 1892, by the Author. CHAPTER I. OOD-BYE Terry, and for the sake of the Goddess Love don't you travel too far into the backwoods. Write me from all points, for I am feeling-- Well, Terry, old boy, would it not be safer for you to marry?

The deep, rollicking voice ceased because it had to. The two friends clasped hands but neither spoke. This was their first parting. Terry Denver and Jack Boyd had been at school together, fought for the same girl, pitted tops, swapped alleys, done everything, in fact, but part. After they had grown up they went to Montreal to live. Slowly at first, more rapidly in after years, they climbed the social slope. One more step then the erstwhile country boys would have reached the summit and gained wealth. They were lawyers. To such wealth comes readily. Not so, though, with Terry and Jack. They had talked honestly for all they had gathered. Now, at the last wished time, a legacy had been left Terry by a relative in Peterboro. But--all legacies seem to have that mischief making "but." Terry smiled when the one who read the will paused after the word "but."

"You need not read further if there is a but, a beauty or an old maid. I will not marry any of them, not for a million."

"Wait. The clause reads thus: 'To Terry Denver, my cousin's son, I leave $200,000, but he will have to walk, ride or paddle, or combine the three, two hundred miles north, beginning at Peterboro, quite alone. That is alone, but for the casual traveler, whom he may meet. One day to be given him to consider whether he will accept or refuse. He is to be given two thousand dollars over and above the legacy for traveling expenses.'"

"I will tell you in one hour." Terry leisurely sought his friend Jack. No one could have told any man that thing unless it had happened. All that betrayed him was a semi-attempt to put the right hand into the trousers pocket. Not much, eh? Jack knew nothing but strong emotion of some kind caused that little trick to show.

"Well, Terry boy, what's in your pocket now? A big client?"

"Five hundred thousand dollars, Jack, if I can leave you for six months."

"Say, Terry, you have been working too hard and it is after your brain. Did you lift the sum you have told any man that thing unless it had happened. All that betrayed him was a semi-attempt to put the right hand into the trousers pocket. Not much, eh? Jack knew nothing but strong emotion of some kind caused that little trick to show.
