Allan's eyes blazed. The sanctity of the sick-chamber and Manders' hasty retreat were the only two things that kept him from proceeding to extremities. He sent the nurse to his father, and accompanied Manders until he saw him inside the carriage which had brought him to Redhills. Then he looked through the window, and said in a voice which made the occupant shudder-

"My wife is dangerously ill. If anything happens you know what I will do to you.' The carriage drove off, and Allen returned to his father. Mr. Bourchier was not deadyet he prophesied truly when he said these words would be his last. For some days life lingered, but not again did a syllable pass his lips. The watchers could not say whether he was conscious or unconscious. He had done all he had nerved himself to do-far more than dying in silence. After that solemn and stupendous lie, which had made even the hardened villain stand aghast, why should a man want to where he had seen it, and remembered to whom it belonged. He speak again in this world? So when after two or three days Philip Tremaine Bourchier diedand died with apparently little pain -those words still remained his

CHAPTER XXVII. JCSEPHINE IS FREED.

George Manders, after his departure from Redhills, told the driver to take him to the Redton Inn. He dismissed his conveyance and bespoke a bedroom and a sitting-room. He must stay in the neighborhood until Mr. Bourchier's must be at an end. To no one else night. Oh, Yes, he had plenty of death made it certain that his plots could be turn for money—the very furniture in the house at Shepherd's Bush was settled upon his wife. Even if he could borrow money upon it the amount would be too small to be of any service. For the first time, flight, bootyless flight, entered into his head. He was not exactly sure as to the very day on which the forged bill would become due, nor was he clear as to what steps would be taken when its true nature was discovered. His great hope was that Mr. Bourchier would recover, or even partially recover, from his illness. He could not believe he was so near to death. He could not have spoken like that if he thought of dying. What a good plucky one he was after all-what a lie he had told! For a moment Mr. Manders felt almost indignant at the success of falsehood. Or he may have felt like the eagle struck down by the arrow feathered from its own plumage. He must stay near Redhills as long as possible. He decided this over a glass of strong brandy-andwater, and ratified that decision over many more. So he stayed at the Redton Inn, and having nothing else to do, while waiting events, drank all day long. He had now got past the stage where liquor sends its votaries senseless under the table. He could even continue drinking until he grew what may, in a complimentary sense, be called sober again. In fact, the next warning the brandy would give thought not. He was sure to be delirium tremens.

To Carport he must stayed at Redhills but a few hours, then tore herself away, not liking to leave Frances for longer. Allan was very grateful to her. Although all danger had gone by, he longed to be with his wife; but knowing all he knew, it seemed to him it was his duty to stay at Redhills. He was perfectly aware that Josestrength can be known. phine's husband had taken up his abode at Redton Inn, and feared to leave the neighborhood while Manders continued there.

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE TORRYBURN CORNER, WATER ST, CHATHAM

The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the AD JANCE to those non-paying subscribers. The second reason is that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially

Having published the ADVANCE for sixteen years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore enterprise - a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that cleanliness of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day-I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
