TIM'S CHRISTMAS.

BY JOHN LAW.

The sun lay like a red ball in the foggy sky, high up above the London houses. One could not see across the street or recognize the faces of passersby, for the yellow fog blinded one's eyes and confused one's

There, in a garret, two little boys stood with their faces pressed to a pane of glass, watching the red ball and wondering.

"It's Sally!" he cried. "I'll unlock the "I thought you wos school board," he explained as an old woman came into the room carrying a jug. "Mother's took our boots, and 'er said if school board comed we wosn't to let 'im in. What 'ave you got in that jug?"

"Wos mother drunk?" inquired the visitor, without heeding his question. "Well, 'er slept 'eavy last night." "'Ave yer had any breakfast?" "Nothink. Baby's cried 'isself to sleep, and Bill and me's been lookin at the harvest moon, what you and me seed when we

"Now I'll be off," she said when a fire burned in the grate. "If any one comes after me, just yer say, 'Does yer want rags sorted?' and if the party says 'Yes,' then yer say, 'Well, Sally wun't be 'ome for a

"All right," said Tim. "When will you be back?" "Not before 1, sonny."

Saying this, the old woman left the room, casting a glance at the fire that gleamed through the fog, and a hasty look at the red ball in the sky which Tim called the "'arvest moon." She knew it was the sun, but why should she confuse the minds After the door was shut the boys went to the fire and crouched down on the hearth.

Yellow fog filled the room, hiding the old bed where the baby lay under a dirty blanket and throwing a curtain over the broken chairs and boxes. Tim held his hands up before the burning sticks. He looked won-drous wise in the firelight. Gleams fell on his small white face, showing his wizened features, from which all traces of childhood seemed to have vanished. He had been sole protector of his two little brothers for the space of a year and a half-ever since his father found a home in the cemetery. His mother drank, and when drunk she was sometimes violent. He had seen a good deal of life, although he was only 8, for he lived in a lodging house. Fights, murders, suicides and deaths made epochs in his existence, and he talked of "when I wos young" as though the time lay far back in Presently the baby began to cry, and Tim went to fetch it from the bed. He brought it to the fire and fed it with some of the tea which old Sally had given him for his breakfast. While he was busy with the baby, Bill crawled to the window. "Oh, Tim," he said, "the red ball 'as the country. Then Tim's thoughts wandered to the days when he had gone hopping with old Sally, to the harvest moon and the hop-fields. He would have been perfectly happy then if he had not "worrited" about the children. "When I wos young," he said aloud,

"I never worrited about nothink!" Just as the words were said a shrill cry came from the window. "What's the matter?" asked Tim. "I's cut me thumb wid a bit o' glass,"

"Come to the light and let me see," said The little boy came howling to the hearth, holding out his thumb and pointing to the blood upon it. "Whatever will I do!" exclaimed Tim. "It's lock jaw he's got, I knows it."

Only the week before a man had died from lockjaw in the room below the garret. and Tim had heard his mother discussing thumb, he'd have pulled through," some one had said, "but all the doctors in Lon- moonshining done away back in the fast don couldn't force his jaws open after he nesses of the mountains as ever."-New got to the hospital." Tim laid the baby on the bed, where it lay crying as loud as it could cry, because it was cold and famished. Then he went back to the fireplace, and found a square piece of stick. "'Old yer mouth open," he said to Bill. The little boy stopped crying and opened Tim slipped the stick between his teeth. "Now," said Tim, "come along to the 'os-"What is it?" inquired the hospital porter as he passed through the gate.

"Lockjaw, sir!" panted Tim. Loud peals of laughter made him stare at the doctors and students who had gathered round Bill.

"Ain't it lockjaw?" he whispered to a nurse, who was standing by. "No," said the woman, "of course it For a moment Tim could not believe his senses. Then an awful vision floated before him, a vision of his mother. Supposing she came home while he was away and found the baby alone, crying? What would happen then? It is but a step, they say, from the sublime to the ridiculous, but sometimes that step is across a precipice. Tim shuddered when he heard the students laughing at his mistake. He had meant to save Bill's life, and all he had done was to make himself a laughing stock. Without a word he took his brother's hand and left the hospital. Bill trotted by his side through the foggy street, pointing to the sticking plaster on his thumb, and chattering about the penny he had received from one of the medical students. "P'raps mother ain't come home," thought Tim, "or p'raps 'er's so drunk 'er

"Why, this is the boy who came here an hour ago with the lock jaw case," said the doctor when Sally laid Tim on the table. The students crowded round to look, but they did not laugh at Tim now, for they thought he was dead. They listened to the doctor's questions and watched old Sally's face while she explained that the boy had fallen on the hearth in the garret. "Is he your grandson?" inquired the doctor while he felt Tim's pulse. "No, he ain't. I'm a lone woman. I've got no children. I fend for myself." "Well, it's a matter for the police," the doctor said. "I believe the boy has been knocked down or kicked. His nead's

"Yes, till Christmas." The woman placed the baby on the heap of rags and vanished. At last on Christmas eve when Sally went to the hospital at about 7 o'clock she found Tim himself again.

She sat down beside him, smoothing out her ragged dress and trying to make her crape bonnet sit straight upon her head.

Tim's white face frightened her and she could not speak. She did not want him to see that she was crying.

eyes again, and by the time the nurse had finished singing he was asleep, with one hand under his cheek and the other in Sally's horny fingers. The next morning when the sun was shin ing and the Christmas bells were ringing Sally went again to the hospital. "Don't go up stairs," said the porter aft er Sally had climbed the hospital steps, "your little lad's not there any longer." "Where may 'e be?" "I'll show you." She followed the porter along the passages and down a staircase.

"Is 'e dead?" she asked when the porter stopped to unlock an iron door.
"Yes; I've just brought him down here," said the porter. Old Sally went into the mortuary, and stood crying while the man uncovered a little coffin. There lay Tim, with a smile on his face and his hands holding a bit of holly, "because it was Christmas." For a minute Sally looked silently at him. Then she bent down to kiss his forehead. "Tim, my son," she whispered, "I won't forget my promise." It is several years since little Tim went home to the cemetery. His mother has not been heard of since. The children live in Sally's room, with the cat. Bill has developed a genius for sorting rags, and the baby has been taught to pick out the papers from the rubbish Sally finds in the dust heaps. Somehow or other the old woman man ages to pay the rent and to provide food for the children. How she does this is only known to herself. She has not forgotten lit tle Tim. Often at dusk, before she lights the dip candle, she calls the boys to the fire and says:

"Now, my sons, I ull just tell yer 'ow yer brother Tim kept 'is last Christmas!" gone out o' the sky."

The Moonshineral Association

T. Dazey, the author of "In Old Kentucky," relates some interesting sto ries about the moonshiners of Kentucky and Tennessee, with whom he associated while visiting that section in search of material for his play. "I became more or loss intimate with many of them," said be, "and learned of the existence of a very s range sort of association, having its headquarters in one of the counties in southern Kentucky, bordering on Tennes see. The object of the association was to protect the members from the government and to encourage the manufacture and sale of illicit whisky. Whenever a mem ber of the band was arrested by the 'rev enooers,' as the revenue officers are called three or four others would testify to an alibi. Each member was bound by av informed on another. In this way they hoped to protect each other for way they hoped to protect each other from the raids of the deputy marshals. The secret leaked out in some way, and for a time-until the matter with her neighbors. "If they'd the band was effectually broken up—the stuck his jaws open directly he cut his men, when captured, were taken to Louis ville for trial, but there's just as much

> York Times. Feminine Longevity. The well known fact that women live longer than men is illustrated as follows The excess of females of all ages over males of all ages in England and Wales is only about 3½ per cent—in round figures 15, 000,000 minus 50,000 to 14,000,000 plus 50,000. But when we begin to compare women over 60 with men over 60 the female majority becomes much greater, and when we once pass 85 the old men are nowhere. The female nonogenarians nearly double the male. There are 854 women over 95 to 354 men, and 164 gammers to 42 gaffers who own to a century.
