Ray's Experiment.

'Oh Gert ! do stop bothering One might as well try to read near a lunatic when he had a wild spell on,' and the speaker gave himself an impatient twitch in his chair.

The little girl addressed, who was fidgeting at the window, made no reply, for a moment, but kept up the annoying rat-a-t t-tat, which she had been making on the glass with her fingers.

At last, finding it impossible to go the end they succeeded--as all those do. on with his reading, the boy was noisily leaving the room when the girl, thinking she had inflicted torture enough for once, called out : 'Come back, Ray, I will stop. You haven't got a bit of patience, have you ?

'Patience !' ejaculated her brother. You would try the patience of Job.'

'Oh, children,' said Mrs. Merrill, who came in the room at that moment, 'do stop talking so loudly. My head aches badly, and your noise spoiled my nap." 'Oh, mamma, I am sorry,' said Gerty, who, if really a very provoking child, was naturally kind-hearted. 'but Ray does get cross over such little things." 'I don't; so now !' was that young gentleman's assertion.

The dispute was bidding fair to be a noisy one, but Mrs. Merrill left the room, taking Gerty with her, and so it ended.

The Merrill children were called by the neighbors 'a noisy pair.' Old Miss Stairs, who lived a couple of houses off, said they were 'imps.' And certainly it was very annoying for her to go to the door a couple of times in an evening to find nobody there, or only a boy asking some foolish question. And then Ray did give her pet dog a

Of course it was harder-a great deal sometimes-but she remained firm, and the result was soon seen, not only in the children, but also in her own life, strengthening her character and making her womanhood more noble.

As for Ray and Gerty, of course it was not all smooth sailing, but they tried faithfully to overcome their faults, and in expecting any help from him, had given up speaking about the matter.

By evening the children had 'made up,' and were as good friends as though no such disagreeable words as we recorded at the first of this story, had ever passed between them.

'Ray,' suddenly ejaculated his sister, who was busily hemming a sail for a nice looking boat lying beside them, 'don't you reckon it would give mamma a great surprise if we were to behave like a gentleman and lady for a while ?

'Well, I should say it ought to,' was the reply delivered very emphatically, 'you couldn't be a lady, Gert, no matter how much you tried. and I know you too well to think you will ever try,' and the speaker whittled more briskly than before.

'I guess I could be a lady as easy as you could act like a gentleman, Ray Merrill. Yon always begin saying hateful things. There, take your old sail and sew it yourself,' and Gerty, very red in the face, gave the piece of canvas a scornful toss towards her brother.

All right, Gert, you go ahead on the sewing and I will stop; but that was quite an idea you mentioned a few minutes ago. Spose we try it.'

'Will you Ray ?'

'Course I will, if you do. Let us agree to keep it up for a week and see if mamma notices any difference.'

'All right. It will be such fun, for I know you can never keep it up for a day,' and Ray chuckled to himself, thinking of the coming discomfiture of his sister. Gerty was burning to make an angry reply, but she was a resolute little thing ; she made up her mind to hold out for a week and she was going to do it.

The trials of the first few days were many and hard. To Gerty it seemed as though she had never wanted to lose her temper so much, but thoughts of Ray's triumph if she did, upheld her.

Ray ached numberless times to 'put that Gert down a peg or two,' but controlled himself, especially when he saw his sister holding out so well. To both it seemed a long week, but at length it came to an end, and we find them in the evening talking over affairs.

'Now Ray, you see 1 did do it.' 'Well, and so did I.'

'And how do you like being a gentleman; you know it was a new experience for you,' added Gerty, roguishly.
