has characterised it.

The yachting season is now over, and we are all regretting the loss of the fun that

Heretofore the "Miller" boats were accustomed to have everything pretty much their own way, and Commodore John C Miller-the real Commodore and our leading vachtsman and patron of the sport-always bore the honors he carried off with his accustomed modesty. Others, who won occasionly, accepted their good luck, or the reward of their skill in a similar spirit, and they neither held congratulatory and explanatory receptions for hours on their street steps, nor telegraphed exaggerated accounts of their performances to the papers of two provinces. As to serving up the points of their new boats at hotel tables while they models of them about their persons for exlessons upon their business callers, they He deposed in substance that he was drink herently of the coming craft as "poems", ber, and that morning met Morgan in a Steamer St. George on Tuesday morning, gentleman as his consignee afterwards "dreams", "posies", "earekas" or "para- Regent street saloon, when the latter struck each other for supremecy in a spirit of remained in bed all afternoon and up to ing, acknowledged defeats with generosity, admitted their good luck when fluke winds or opponents' misfortunes favored them and, in short, pursued the pastime of yachting not as a means of intruding their personality. upon the public by means of highly wrought press telegrams, but in a chivalrous and gentlemanly spirit of sporting emulation. This season has witnessed a change, vacht that was heralded by its owner as an Olympian production, glided into the water at Douglastown and was a failure. The boats, in order that, by their being thus Capt. They would meet the veteran commodore on the wharf and, wringing his hand, congratulate him on his success, even though he never crossed the home line in first place; they would prompt him to demand that the boat that led him be at once measured, they would tell him how somebody they timed him at certain points and thus cause him to publish denial of being assisted by fluke winds-advantages which it was other club members' practice to admit. and regard'ess of the crowded state of the asylum, continue to excite and irritate a mind dangerously near the unbalancing It is, therefore, well that the fun is about over for the season, and that everybody realises that recreation for the wags must be sought in a new direction. As correspondence isn't so irritating as newspaper remarks direct, we venture to say that we quite agree with fifty or sixty correspondents who think it was not altogether generous on the World's part to endeavor, on Saturday last, to deprive Fred Tweedie of the credit of cleaning and blackleading the "Poem" by reflecting upon Mr. Quan and the broom with which he scrubbed the craft's bottom. Mr. Quan should have been treated with more consideration than he has been of late by the World writer, for he was the latter's companion and instructor in boat-sailing in his earlier experiences, and nobly stuck by him when he awkwardly capsized and sunk his first yacht off Lamont's mill wharf, sustaining him in the water until the writer and another gentleman got to him and pulled his limp form upon the Derby's deck. Let us hope that the restful winter season will calm the disturbed mind that has been a diversion during the active yachting season and that the owners of the fleet will go into the work of next season with their old-time care and determination to realise the best possible performances by their boats; for sympathy, forbearance and a desire to make others happy, may really have a retarding effect upon the progress essential to every yacht club's success. The "Orianic commodore" has made the following statement in the World and Telegraph, and, upon it, based a long argument manslaughter .- The following gentlemen to convey the impression that reports of the late Miramichi Yacht Club race other than plong the lines of development that is his own were erroneous: "Mr. Hutchison and Mr. J. D. McKay timed them carefully at Hutchison's mill, and found that Oriana was 2m. 15sec three and a quarter miles run, even with the aid of the alleged ten-minutes fluke wind! Oriana had been outsailed so much, when she was not favored by the fluke wind, that she had lost all her ten-minutes gain except 45 seconds!"

The value of any position demonstrated by the foregoing will be understood when it is known that Mr. J. D. McKay stated to us vesterday morning that he never said he timed the boats, or any one of them, at Hutchison's mill or any other point, and, in fact, did not time them, nor could Mr. Hutchison have done so, as he was not in Louglastown at all when the boats passed his mill, to say nothing of his not being in or near the mill. Mr. Hutchison did not time the boats and never said he did. Somebody interested in our Orianic friend ought to see that he is kept somewhat under restraint and prevented from writing about "a prevaricating windbag."

Witness at first refused, but on being pressed walked out with him. walked with Morgan away to the end of the street and got as far as Parliament square when he told Morgan there was no drug shop down there. The two had very little conversation besides this upon the way. Dr. Vanwart testified to attending amongst all the other yacht-owners to omit witness the night of assault and treating him the usual cleaning and refitting of their for some days afterwards. His head was cut and swootlen and his side and breast were badly bruised.

A later despatch says the trial of Joseph Morgan at the County court, on the charge of greviously assaulting Frank Curran, re sulted in a verdict of guilty being returned by the jury after a few minutes deliberation. In sentencing Morgan, judge Steadman dwelt at considerable length upon the unfortunate position in which the drink habit had placed him, commenting upon it as a lesson to other young men who were spending their time knocking about liquor saloons and squandering their hard earned money for the gratification of the drink appetite. He referred feelingly to the great sorrow brought by the prisoner upon his mother and family, and intimated that out of consideration for these he would be more lenient than he otherwise would. Honor said the full penalty of the law for his offence was three years imprisonment. He sentenced him to two years in penitentiary. Morgan seemed affected by his Honor's reference to the sorrow brought upon his mother. most eloquent speakers in Canada, and his earnest words might have touched every heart as he described the condition and needs of the diocese of Algoma. In humorous terms he referred to the mistakes made by English reporters who variously des-He assured the reporter, however, that cribed his diocese as the diocese of Alloa, of Goa, of Alfonse, while one paper actually termed him the Bishop of Ammonia! The speaker, however, very considerately re ferred to the reporter generally as an angelic like individual. After describing the geographical, mineral and agricultural products of the diocese he referred to the former difficulties of travelling, and the great facilities so kindly afforded the missionaries by the Canadian Pacific railway. That company was ever ready to assist the society and not only granted free passes to the missionaries, but gave land on the line of railway for building sites, etc., and assisted materially in many other ways. At present there are only 20 clergy in the diocese, a noble and self-denying body of men, and the bishop touchingly referred to some of their deeds. One of the great needs of the dio cese is funds. The responsibility of the church of England in Canada is to support Algoma. The best investment we can make with our money is to help missionary work, about 2:0 acres, and includes the Cunard Meadows Time forbade him to refer to his Indian work, but he could not help paying them a brief tribute of affection and respect.
